

New! New!

An attractive line of green dinner ware that is both

Novel and Serviceable

Comes in 42-piece sets at $10.25

See these and you will be delighted

Churchill Hardware Co.

CLASSIFIED SECTION

ALL NEW ADS WILL BE FOUND ON BACK PAGE

FOR SALE

FOR SALE—Extra good cow, Dr. G. J. Bachner.

TRAILERS, TRAILERS, TRAILERS—For sale cheap at Sarff's.

FOR SALE—3-ton Republic truck with solid tires, cheap at Sarff's.

FOR SALE—Two young Barred Rock chickens, 124 W. Douglas.

FOR SALE—15,000 fir shakes, $9 per thousand, Box 47, Dillard, Oregon.

FOR SALE—Barn saw on wagon, excellent condition, reasonable, Box 445, Phone 39-11 Sutherland.

FOR SALE—Early Jersey White-fleshed cabbage plants, H. C. Dawson, 625 2nd Ave., S. Phone 422-L.

FOR SALE—Buz saw, 7 horse power motor, installed on Chevrolet truck, Fred Brothers ranch, west of Milrose.

SPRAY OUTFITS—Our spray rigs are built for years of service. Low prices. Spray guns $6 each. Leake & Beyers Co.

FOR SALE—5 high grade Jersey milk cows, 3 and 5 years old. Also good separator. Fred Vander, second house on Looking Glass road.

FOR SALE—Charters' incubators, all equipped, also brooders and chick founts, all at bargain prices, J. H. Booher, Leona, Oregon, Box 518.

BOLTS, BOLTS, BOLTS—Large stock of machine and carriage bolts at reasonable prices. Latent, 60 cents each. Leake & Beyers Co., 1000 E. F. Blvd.

FOR SALE—20 acres at Irigoin, Ore. Irrigated; water paid. Might consider small acreage near Roseburg. Box 134, enro News-Review.

Roseburg Cabinet Shop
230 W. Oak
FURNITURE REPAIRING
Upon Board and Veneer Panel
Cut to Order
Window Screens made to order
E. S. AND F. L. COCKLEREAS

Chiropractor
DRUGLESS HEALTH CENTER
"Complete Health Service"
Mineral Vapor Baths
327 Cass Phone 491

John R. Kelly
Sheet Metal Works
HEATING AND VENTILATING
Western Furnaces
504 N. Jackson Phone 466

All Our Groceries Are Especially Good
The prices are low and service prompt.
WE DELIVER FREE
Phone your orders and the groceries are sent up.
Economy Grocery
O. L. JOHNSON
The Store That Serves You Best
Phone 62 344 N. Jackson, St.

FOR RENT

FOR RENT—Clean, well-furnished 6-room house, with garage. Call 295 or inquire 552 Hoover St.

FOR RENT—Furnished room, steam heated, 122 S. Jackson, opposite Antlers Theatre.

FOR RENT—2-room furnished house, $6 per month. Call Chan-celior cigar store, Cass St.

WANTED

WANTED TO TRADE—Lot in town for used truck. G. T. Royer, Dillard.

WANTED—Heavy breeds hatching eggs by Jan. 25. Rt. 1, Box 176, Roseburg.

WOOD CHOPPERS WANTED—Will furnish house. Wood on level ground. Call Henry Andrie, Nash Garage.

WANTED—Woman to help in cook house, small camp on Coos Bay highway. All women help. Box 23, care News-Review.

LOST

LOST—Vanity case on Court St. Reward, call 295-J.

MISCELLANEOUS

TRADE—House in Grants Pass for Roseburg or vicinity, 313 Horneas St., Grants Pass, Ore.

WOOD for the cutting—timber down on level ground, J. R. Parrott, Camas Valley, Ore.

CEMENT work in all its branches, day or contract. Mixers and building holes for hire. James Miller, Phone 119-Y.

CAR OWNER—Don't forget to call 553 when in need of auto parts. Sarff's Auto Wrecking House.

BUY raisins direct from producer. Twenty pounds of Thompson Seedless for $1.25, delivered to any address in Douglas or adjoining Co. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. J. A. Cobb, P. O. Box 413, Red Bluff, Cal.

CURTISS PLANE COMPANY JOINS ITALIAN CONCERN

(Associated Press United Wire)

NEW YORK, Jan. 16.—Curtiss Aeroplane and Motor company is reported in Wall street to have formed an affiliation with the Caproni Aviation company of Italy, one of the largest European manufacturers of airplanes. A new company, it is understood, is to be formed to control all the patents and designs for exclusive manufacture and sale in the United States of Caproni seaplanes and airplanes. Curtiss and Caproni companies, it is reported, will jointly control the new company. It is not known whether there will be any public financing, although one report had it that $4,000,000 in securities were to be offered.

Automobile Insurance

Your car is not fully equipped unless it is insured. Fire and theft insurance are not the only essential coverages. You should be protected with Public Liability, Property Damage and Collision Insurance. Protect yourself from serious loss by insuring today. We will gladly explain these different forms of insurance. Call or phone.

G. W. Young & Son

INSURANCE
116 Cass St. Phone 417

WHY SUFFER With Rheumatism and Neuritis

When we can positively assure you full relief or your money back?

CASEY'S GUARANTEED RHEUMATIC AND NEURITIS REMEDY purifies the blood, reduces pain and swelling, stops cramps in the limbs through direct action on the stomach, liver and kidneys.

$1.50 per bottle

Marster's Drug Store, Roseburg

Stonaker Drug Store, Yoncalla

Redwell's Pharmacy, Sutherlin

Oakland Drug Co., Oakland

Oreckid

THIS HAS HAPPENED

Ashtoreth Ashie, involved in the strange affairs of her millionaire employer, becomes suddenly and seriously ill. Monty English, her sweetheart, leaves Boston to work from the New York office of his firm. Hollis Hart, her wealthy boss, disappears—presumably for Europe.

Before his departure he tells Ashtoreth of his transient interest in a girl he knows as Mae de Marr. The name proves to have been assumed. "Mae" is actually Sadie Morton, an old friend of Ashtoreth's. She has become a gold-digger and a pensioner on the good-hearted bounty of Mr. Hart.

Ashtoreth resolves to have nothing to do with her.

During her convalescence she receives a large box, which her mother brings to her bed.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER X

When the doctor had gone, Maizie put the box on Ashtoreth's bed and lifted the cover mysteriously. Inside there were layers and layers of tissue.

"You'd never guess!" she breathed ecstatically. "Look, honey!"

From the folds of paper she drew a soft cloud of tender chiffon, the color of a golden sunset, and like the blush on the cheek of a peach. Pale amber touched with rose.

"It's the newest shade," she exclaimed, and caressed it with her finger tips. "Dawn-dew!" they call it. A negligee, honey! Did you ever see anything so sweet in all your life! And look—there's an orchid tucked in the front there. See the lace on it. Silk lace!"

She shook it lovingly and held it softly.

"It's gorgeous!" she said. "But, dearest, you oughtn't to have bought it!"

Maizie beamed happily.

"I didn't," she declared. "It's from Sadie! Sadie Morton. And look, honey—little mules, too. All feathers and satin, and little French flowers. And negligee garters. And stockings just like cobwebs, with flowers embroidered down the front!"

"Sadie Morton!" whispered Ashtoreth. "How did she know I was ill, Mother?"

Maizie was exhibiting the contents of the big box, one by one. Slipping the garters over her wrist. Posing the little mules on her finger tips.

"She telephoned one day," she explained, "and I told her you were sick. And next day this box came from Hollander's. Last Thursday it was. And I've been so busy since I haven't thanked her or anything. I'll call her up by and by and tell her how much you like them. She sent a note, too. It wasn't sealed and I read it. I knew you wouldn't."

"Dear Ash," she had written, "You ought to get a break on the windfall I got. Hollis' lawyer had what they call a blunder. And I got another thousand for signing on the dotted line. Now me and George are going to get married. I'm going to be a doctor. But I know you're sick. But I know this."

"What was the matter with me?" asked Ashtoreth haltingly.

"Well, first off he said it was influenza," explained Maizie. "Then he thought it might be bronchial pneumonia. But your lungs all cleared up fine as a whistle. Then he said it was just plain exhaustion, and maybe you were on the verge of a nervous breakdown."

"Breakdown!" Ashtoreth tried to laugh. "He was just trying to scare you, Mother!"

"Well, he wants you to go away," announced Maizie, "for a nice long rest."

Ashtoreth frowned.

"I hope you told him," she said, "that we're poor as Job's turkey. And that a couple of church mice are positively affluent by comparison."

Maizie tilted her chin.

"Think I want to sound poor-mouthed?" she demanded. "I told him nothing of the kind. And I guess we can manage a little trip, if that's what my girl needs."

"Darling," said Ashtoreth, "there will be no trips for this family until we've money in the bank. Dad's insurance is tied up, thank God, or you'd have spent that on me long ago. Now stay your foolishness, Mrs. Ashie, and read Sadie's note."

It was the same purple paper on which Sadie had written to Hollis Hart. And Sadie was still using green ink.

"Dear Ash," she had written, "You ought to get a break on the windfall I got. Hollis' lawyer had what they call a blunder. And I got another thousand for signing on the dotted line. Now me and George are going to get married. I'm going to be a doctor. But I know you're sick. But I know this."

"What was the matter with me?" asked Ashtoreth haltingly.

"Well, first off he said it was influenza," explained Maizie. "Then he thought it might be bronchial pneumonia. But your lungs all cleared up fine as a whistle. Then he said it was just plain exhaustion, and maybe you were on the verge of a nervous breakdown."

"Breakdown!" Ashtoreth tried to laugh. "He was just trying to scare you, Mother!"

"Well, he wants you to go away," announced Maizie, "for a nice long rest."

Ashtoreth frowned.

"I hope you told him," she said, "that we're poor as Job's turkey. And that a couple of church mice are positively affluent by comparison."

Maizie tilted her chin.

"Think I want to sound poor-mouthed?" she demanded. "I told him nothing of the kind. And I guess we can manage a little trip, if that's what my girl needs."

"Darling," said Ashtoreth, "there will be no trips for this family until we've money in the bank. Dad's insurance is tied up, thank God, or you'd have spent that on me long ago. Now stay your foolishness, Mrs. Ashie, and read Sadie's note."

It was the same purple paper on which Sadie had written to Hollis Hart. And Sadie was still using green ink.

"Dear Ash," she had written, "You ought to get a break on the windfall I got. Hollis' lawyer had what they call a blunder. And I got another thousand for signing on the dotted line. Now me and George are going to get married. I'm going to be a doctor. But I know you're sick. But I know this."

"What was the matter with me?" asked Ashtoreth haltingly.

"Well, first off he said it was influenza," explained Maizie. "Then he thought it might be bronchial pneumonia. But your lungs all cleared up fine as a whistle. Then he said it was just plain exhaustion, and maybe you were on the verge of a nervous breakdown."

"Breakdown!" Ashtoreth tried to laugh. "He was just trying to scare you, Mother!"

"Well, he wants you to go away," announced Maizie, "for a nice long rest."

Ashtoreth frowned.

"I hope you told him," she said, "that we're poor as Job's turkey. And that a couple of church mice are positively affluent by comparison."

Maizie tilted her chin.

"Think I want to sound poor-mouthed?" she demanded. "I told him nothing of the kind. And I guess we can manage a little trip, if that's what my girl needs."

"Darling," said Ashtoreth, "there will be no trips for this family until we've money in the bank. Dad's insurance is tied up, thank God, or you'd have spent that on me long ago. Now stay your foolishness, Mrs. Ashie, and read Sadie's note."

It was the same purple paper on which Sadie had written to Hollis Hart. And Sadie was still using green ink.

"Dear Ash," she had written, "You ought to get a break on the windfall I got. Hollis' lawyer had what they call a blunder. And I got another thousand for signing on the dotted line. Now me and George are going to get married. I'm going to be a doctor. But I know you're sick. But I know this."

"What was the matter with me?" asked Ashtoreth haltingly.

"Well, first off he said it was influenza," explained Maizie. "Then he thought it might be bronchial pneumonia. But your lungs all cleared up fine as a whistle. Then he said it was just plain exhaustion, and maybe you were on the verge of a nervous breakdown."

"Breakdown!" Ashtoreth tried to laugh. "He was just trying to scare you, Mother!"

"Well, he wants you to go away," announced Maizie, "for a nice long rest."

Ashtoreth frowned.

"I hope you told him," she said, "that we're poor as Job's turkey. And that a couple of church mice are positively affluent by comparison."

Maizie tilted her chin.

"Think I want to sound poor-mouthed?" she demanded. "I told him nothing of the kind. And I guess we can manage a little trip, if that's what my girl needs."

"Darling," said Ashtoreth, "there will be no trips for this family until we've money in the bank. Dad's insurance is tied up, thank God, or you'd have spent that on me long ago. Now stay your foolishness, Mrs. Ashie, and read Sadie's note."

It was the same purple paper on which Sadie had written to Hollis Hart. And Sadie was still using green ink.

"Dear Ash," she had written, "You ought to get a break on the windfall I got. Hollis' lawyer had what they call a blunder. And I got another thousand for signing on the dotted line. Now me and George are going to get married. I'm going to be a doctor. But I know you're sick. But I know this."

"What was the matter with me?" asked Ashtoreth haltingly.

"Well, first off he said it was influenza," explained Maizie. "Then he thought it might be bronchial pneumonia. But your lungs all cleared up fine as a whistle. Then he said it was just plain exhaustion, and maybe you were on the verge of a nervous breakdown."

"Breakdown!" Ashtoreth tried to laugh. "He was just trying to scare you, Mother!"

"Well, he wants you to go away," announced Maizie, "for a nice long rest."

Ashtoreth frowned.

"I hope you told him," she said, "that we're poor as Job's turkey. And that a couple of church mice are positively affluent by comparison."

Maizie tilted her chin.

"Think I want to sound poor-mouthed?" she demanded. "I told him nothing of the kind. And I guess we can manage a little trip, if that's what my girl needs."

"Darling," said Ashtoreth, "there will be no trips for this family until we've money in the bank. Dad's insurance is tied up, thank God, or you'd have spent that on me long ago. Now stay your foolishness, Mrs. Ashie, and read Sadie's note."

It was the same purple paper on which Sadie had written to Hollis Hart. And Sadie was still using green ink.

"Dear Ash," she had written, "You ought to get a break on the windfall I got. Hollis' lawyer had what they call a blunder. And I got another thousand for signing on the dotted line. Now me and George are going to get married. I'm going to be a doctor. But I know you're sick. But I know this."

"What was the matter with me?" asked Ashtoreth haltingly.

"Well, first off he said it was influenza," explained Maizie. "Then he thought it might be bronchial pneumonia. But your lungs all cleared up fine as a whistle. Then he said it was just plain exhaustion, and maybe you were on the verge of a nervous breakdown."

"Breakdown!" Ashtoreth tried to laugh. "He was just trying to scare you, Mother!"

"Well, he wants you to go away," announced Maizie, "for a nice long rest."

Ashtoreth frowned.

"I hope you told him," she said, "that we're poor as Job's turkey. And that a couple of church mice are positively affluent by comparison."

Maizie tilted her chin.

"Think I want to sound poor-mouthed?" she demanded. "I told him nothing of the kind. And I guess we can manage a little trip, if that's what my girl needs."

"Darling," said Ashtoreth, "there will be no trips for this family until we've money in the bank. Dad's insurance is tied up, thank God, or you'd have spent that on me long ago. Now stay your foolishness, Mrs. Ashie, and read Sadie's note."

It was the same purple paper on which Sadie had written to Hollis Hart. And Sadie was still using green ink.

"Dear Ash," she had written, "You ought to get a break on the windfall I got. Hollis' lawyer had what they call a blunder. And I got another thousand for signing on the dotted line. Now me and George are going to get married. I'm going to be a doctor. But I know you're sick. But I know this."

"What was the matter with me?" asked Ashtoreth haltingly.

"Well, first off he said it was influenza," explained Maizie. "Then he thought it might be bronchial pneumonia. But your lungs all cleared up fine as a whistle. Then he said it was just plain exhaustion, and maybe you were on the verge of a nervous breakdown."

"Breakdown!" Ashtoreth tried to laugh. "He was just trying to scare you, Mother!"

"Well, he wants you to go away," announced Maizie, "for a nice long rest."

Ashtoreth frowned.

"I hope you told him," she said, "that we're poor as Job's turkey. And that a couple of church mice are positively affluent by comparison."

Maizie tilted her chin.

mind if Mother read your little letter."

Maizie passed through a litter of mail on the dressing table. "Here it is. It's like dreck to me, but maybe you'll understand. All I got to say is Sadie's a good, generous girl. And I hope she's come honestly by all her fine things. . . . Will I read it to you, Lamb?"

Ashtoreth assented weakly.

"And put that negligee where I can feast my eyes on it," she ordered. "This is going to be a long convalescence, Mother. I can see that from here. A girl with an outfit like this ought to be a chronic invalid."

Maizie smiled joyfully.

"It's wonderful," she declared, "to hear you talking like your old self. Oh, my, we had a dreadful time, dear! The doctor said he never saw such a good nurse as me outside a hospital. First, he wanted me to send you somewhere you could get constant nursing. But I said I guess, doctor, I can take as good care of my little girl as any hired help. And he had to admit I was right, Ashtoreth."

"What was the matter with me?" asked Ashtoreth haltingly.

"Well, first off he said it was influenza," explained Maizie. "Then he thought it might be bronchial pneumonia. But your lungs all cleared up fine as a whistle. Then he said it was just plain exhaustion, and maybe you were on the verge of a nervous breakdown."

"Breakdown!" Ashtoreth tried to laugh. "He was just trying to scare you, Mother!"

"Well, he wants you to go away," announced Maizie, "for a nice long rest."

Ashtoreth frowned.

"I hope you told him," she said, "that we're poor as Job's turkey. And that a couple of church mice are positively affluent by comparison."

Maizie tilted her chin.

"Think I want to sound poor-mouthed?" she demanded. "I told him nothing of the kind. And I guess we can manage a little trip, if that's what my girl needs."

"Darling," said Ashtoreth, "there will be no trips for this family until we've money in the bank. Dad's insurance is tied up, thank God, or you'd have spent that on me long ago. Now stay your foolishness, Mrs. Ashie, and read Sadie's note."

It was the same purple paper on which Sadie had written to Hollis Hart. And Sadie was still using green ink.

"Dear Ash," she had written, "You ought to get a break on the windfall I got. Hollis' lawyer had what they call a blunder. And I got another thousand for signing on the dotted line. Now me and George are going to get married. I'm going to be a doctor. But I know you're sick. But I know this."

"What was the matter with me?" asked Ashtoreth haltingly.

"Well, first off he said it was influenza," explained Maizie. "Then he thought it might be bronchial pneumonia. But your lungs all cleared up fine as a whistle. Then he said it was just plain exhaustion, and maybe you were on the verge of a nervous breakdown."

"Breakdown!" Ashtoreth tried to laugh. "He was just trying to scare you, Mother!"

"Well, he wants you to go away," announced Maizie, "for a nice long rest."

Ashtoreth frowned.

"I hope you told him," she said, "that we're poor as Job's turkey. And that a couple of church mice are positively affluent by comparison."

Maizie tilted her chin.

"Think I want to sound poor-mouthed?" she demanded. "I told him nothing of the kind. And I guess we can manage a little trip, if that's what my girl needs."

"Darling," said Ashtoreth, "there will be no trips for this family until we've money in the bank. Dad's insurance is tied up, thank God, or you'd have spent that on me long ago. Now stay your foolishness, Mrs. Ashie, and read Sadie's note."

It was the same purple paper on which Sadie had written to Hollis Hart. And Sadie was still using green ink.

"Dear Ash," she had written, "You ought to get a break on the windfall I got. Hollis' lawyer had what they call a blunder. And I got another thousand for signing on the dotted line. Now me and George are going to get married. I'm going to be a doctor. But I know you're sick. But I know this."

"What was the matter with me?" asked Ashtoreth haltingly.

"Well, first off he said it was influenza," explained Maizie. "Then he thought it might be bronchial pneumonia. But your lungs all cleared up fine as a whistle. Then he said it was just plain exhaustion, and maybe you were on the verge of a nervous breakdown."

"Breakdown!" Ashtoreth tried to laugh. "He was just trying to scare you, Mother!"

"Well, he wants you to go away," announced Maizie, "for a nice long rest."

Ashtoreth frowned.

"I hope you told him," she said, "that we're poor as Job's turkey. And that a couple of church mice are positively affluent by comparison."