CHICAGO, Feb. 18.—The purple fades from the gang massacre picture, and the blue of police uniforms again tints the canvas. The state's attorney's office expressed itself today as satisfied that the purple gang of Detroit had no important part in last Thursday's seamy slaying. At the same time investigators were given further testimony that two of the slayers were dressed as police officers.

In the four days since the seven members of the George (Bugs) Moran gang were slain against a brick wall and lined there has been no arrest of a single suspect, it was pointed out by David Stansbury, deputy state's attorney. H. Bruce Caldwell, president of the board of education, volunteered new information last night which accelerated the investigation. Caldwell told of seeing an automobile which he thought at the time was a police squad car. The machine ran through a red light a few blocks north of the garage in which the murders were committed.

Caldwell fixed the time of the incident as a few minutes before the slayings took place. Of the five in the car, he said, two men wore police uniforms. The car had a slight collision with a truck shortly after it passed him, Caldwell related, corroborating the account of a truck driver who earlier had reported that his truck was grazed by the machine.

Big Hunt In Vain
About 400 arrests were made in over-Sunday raids, but no "big guns" of the gang register were among those taken.

The Herald and Examiner published an account of a long distance telephone interview with Al Capone who is at Miami Beach, Fla. The newspaper quoted Capone as saying:

"That fellow Moran isn't called 'Bugs' for nothing. He's crazy if he thinks I had anything to do with that killing. I don't know anything about that shooting, and I don't care. Everytime anything happens in that town, I did it. But I've got a good alibi this time. I was lying on the beach when it happened, getting sunbaked."

Six of the massacred men were to be buried today, but there were to be no such gaudy funerals as have been held for other gangsters.

MISS QUINE BRIDE RICHARD COEN AT SERVICE SUNDAY

The marriage of Miss Evelyn Quine, daughter of Judge and Mrs. Geo. K. Quine, and Mr. Richard Coen, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Coen, was quietly solemnized at a pretty home ceremony at the bride's parents' home, Sunday morning at 7 o'clock.

Dr. Chas. Edwards, pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal church, read the service, which only the members of the families of the bride and bridegroom attended. A wedding breakfast followed the ceremony and the couple went on a trip to San Francisco and southern points by auto. On their return they will reside in the Banks apartments on South Pine street.

PROGRAM OF MUSIC APPRECIATION IS GIVEN IN SCHOOLS

Miss Margaret M. Streeter, of the educational department of the Victor Talking Machine company, Camden, New Jersey, is here today cooperating with OHS Music store in a program of music appreciation in the local schools.

Miss Streeter's object is to promote the cause of better music and its appreciation and to demonstrate the cause to the students. This morning she gave a talk to pupils of the Junior high school and this afternoon is to address the Benson school students in assembly. She will also meet with the teachers of the city schools this afternoon. Her talk to the students will also include a demonstration, using records, and points will be given on how to listen to and get the best value from music. This system is being used extensively throughout the country in music education in progressive schools. Lectures to the faculty members of the schools will include instruction on how to interest the student in picking out classical music and learning to enjoy the best selections.

GROWERS HEAR FINE REPORT ON FARM CROPS

ential in price in favor of white wheats makes it desirable to produce white wheat if varieties are sown which have averaged high yield under local conditions. The Oregon experiment station and extension service have been experimenting and demonstrating varieties of white wheat both for spring and fall seeding. Continued close attention to the treatment of wheat for smut is very necessary in order to keep on reducing the smut percentage as shown by inspection receipts. Substantial improvement in this regard has been made during the year. More extensive use of Jenkin Club wheat is recommended by the committee. Federation is a good spring variety.

"Indications are that there will be some demand for genuine winter rye and for genuine spring rye for seed purposes. There are several areas that might grow some rye to advantage for seed and for food."

"The aged flax crop is very much in demand in Oregon, although the crop has not proven particularly desirable to farmers except in few instances. Low yields have contributed to this in some areas and the method of marketing is probably another factor."

Oats Recommended
The Oregon sample census indicates an increase in acreage of 44 per cent of winter oats and a decrease of 3.5 per cent of spring oats for 1929, or a total acreage of about 2 per cent larger than in 1928 being considered. Gray Winter, Three Grain Victory and Markton oats are recommended for planting in Douglas county.

"According to sample census estimates Oregon barley growers intend to increase their acreage about 7 per cent in 1929 compared to 1928. From the standpoint of home demand, there is ample justification for increasing the barley acreage in Oregon in both eastern and western sections, although in some instances other crops may be more desirable."

Demand for Corn
"Since inspection reports at northwestern points show that 1,500 to 2,000 cars of corn are shipped in each year, it is evident that the home demand for corn grain is ample to absorb the intended increase of about 10 per cent. The feed situation also indicates that there will be a demand for the proposed increase of about 3 per cent in corn for silage. The cash outlook for corn, however, will be influenced somewhat by the cost of corn from surplus states. Douglas county is one of the largest growers of corn in Oregon and should increase its corn acreage. Minnesota No. 13 and McKay Dent are recommended."

"The present outlook is for a strong demand for hay in 1929 as the crop in 1928 was not large and stocks at the close of the present feeding season are expected to be smaller than for several years. Unless there should be a sudden change in conditions the chances are that there will be little or no carry-over of hay, which should be rather favorable for hay prices in the northwest."

Increasing Alfalfa
"There is a pronounced tendency toward the increasing of alfalfa acreages in all sections of western Oregon except the coast. Standardization on Grimm alfalfa is quite general. Alfalfa is in a great many places replacing clover and other leguminous crops. The sample census indicated that Oregon farmers intend to increase alfalfa acreage 2.4 per cent and all clover acreage by 11.4 per cent with a slight increase in vetch. Importations of Argentinean and Turkish seed, both unfit for planting in the United States, and both stained 10 per cent red, have been reported with some of the former in San Francisco. Growers should be warned against planting any such seed. More attention should be given to the production of better quality alfalfa hay. There is a very great need that federal hay supervision be instituted in Oregon and Washington. Douglas county has a large forage problem in range and pasture improvement and in the growing of more legume hay such as alfalfa and vetch."

Potatoes to Be Less
"According to the sample census, Oregon farmers intend to plant about 11 per cent less acreage of potatoes in 1929 than in 1928, or the same as shown by intentions to plant data for the whole country. One or two specialized potato counties in the state may not change the acreage greatly. With the intended decrease there should be no shortage of potatoes in 1929-1930 if average yields are secured. There is a substantial carry-over of 1928 potatoes in sight and the federal outlook report is especially bullish regarding the outlook for potatoes to be marketed before July 1. Oregon potato growers are confronted with marketing problems in transportation costs and standardization."

Seed Crops Recommended
"The report deals quite extensively with the small seeds outlook. Douglas county, because of its climatic conditions, has a wonderful opportunity. It is stated, to raise seed crops, particularly clover, alfalfa, vetch and soy beans. Mr. Hyslop urges that the coast sections specialize in the production of bent grass seed, which offers a wide market, he reports."

"Apparently Oregon farmers intend to increase their acreage of alfalfa seed 40 per cent in 1929," Mr. Hyslop stated. "The sample census and intentions to produce survey indicated that there will be an increase of 100 per cent of Grimm alfalfa for seed, but the acreage is comparatively small. This is an opportunity for Douglas county growers who are interested in the production of alfalfa seed."

Gardiner community is already producing much bent grass seed. Mr. Hyslop stated, and other coast communities would also engage in that activity. He also urged more plantings of hairy vetch and purple vetch for seed. The state is now shipping from 11 to 14 cars and this amount can easily be trebled without affecting the market. Douglas county is particularly adapted to the production of vetch seed, the speaker stated."

Corn Planting Urged
Douglas county growers were urged by Prof. E. N. Bressman to plant more corn, but he also advised that plantings be limited to one or two standard strains. He recommended particularly Minnesota No. 13, for grain corn and McKay yellow dent for silage."

McKay yellow dent was originated by Robert McKay, a resident of Brookway, and is particularly suitable for continued and more extensive use in Douglas county. The experiment station, Mr. Bressman states, has been submitting the McKay variety to all tests and has found that it excels all others for silage purposes, although it is a little too late, particularly in the Willamette valley, for grain purposes."

Oregon, Prof. Bressman stated, is shipping in about 2,000 carloads of corn annually despite the fact that corn can easily be grown in this state. He particularly emphasized the point that turkey growers should raise their own corn for feeding purposes."

He spoke on methods of reducing production costs, particularly by early plowing and killing of weeds, rather than by late plowing and subsequent expensive cultivation."

County Agent J. C. Leedy spoke briefly on the farm crops program and weed control."

Tomorrow's meeting is to be given over to livestock reports and recommendations, with C. O. Garret as chairman."

Wednesday is to be poultry day and is expected to be the big day of the conference. A very interesting report is being completed for presentation and will contain a great deal of very valuable information and advice. The chamber of commerce is sponsoring a banquet at noon for local business men and all visiting poultry growers."

The meetings will be held daily at the K. P. Hall and it is urged that every grower of the county take advantage of the opportunity to hear the discussions on the subjects in which he is particularly interested."

room Saturday midnight. The investigating officials and Dr. Fishbaugh expressed the opinion last night that Doheny had been called to Plunkett's room late in the evening. That Doheny had seen that Plunkett's mind was in serious condition was declared to have been gathered from evidence in the room. A pillow, from one of the twin beds, was neatly placed upon a chaise longue indicating to the officials that Doheny had tried to quiet the man by having him lie down. That Plunkett refused was indicated by the undisturbed pillow.

Topped and disarranged furniture and furnishings indicated to the investigators that Doheny had battled with his murderer. The investigators theorized that the temporarily insane man tore loose from his friend and employer, firing the fatal shot from an obsolete model revolver, which he had possessed several years. They also observed the possibility that Doheny had for a moment quieted Plunkett, and that both were seated in chairs a few feet apart when the shot was fired.

Suicidal Shot Heard
Immediately Plunkett left the room only to be met in hallway by Mrs. Doheny and Dr. Fishbaugh, who had been called from a theater to attend Plunkett. "You stay out of here," Plunkett shouted, according to the physician, who said the crazed man turned about and slammed the bedroom door behind him. A shot followed. Dr. Fishbaugh sent Mrs. Doheny back to her living room, and entered Plunkett's room to find both bodies.

The elder Doheny, founder of the oil business which he had virtually turned over to his 36-year-old son, collapsed when he walked from his home across the street to view the body of his son. He recovered quickly, and assured friends that he would face the situation as stoically as possible.

Although Mrs. Doheny was reported suffering acutely from shock, the physician said, she had not allowed herself to become hysterical.

Preceding Episode
A disclosure of primary interest by the investigators last night was that following the Saturday afternoon futile conference at "Greystone" young Doheny and his wife visited Plunkett at his apartment in Los Angeles. It was in another effort to induce Plunkett to go to the sanatorium. Plunkett's refusal evolved into a verbal tilt with his employer.

After the Dohenys left Plunkett they went to a motion picture show and upon returning home the secretary telephoned the Doheny home, demanding to know the meaning of assertions his employer made.

"It was only an impulsive remark," Mrs. Doheny was stated to have replied when answering the call.

A short time later Plunkett, who had been the trusted employee and confidential secretary of Doheny for many years, entered the Beverly Hills mansion with his own key and soon called Doheny to the room, where both died violent deaths.

An "insane fit" drove Plunkett to the killing and suicide, declared Dr. Fishbaugh, who described the relationship of the two men as being "like brothers."

The doctor said he believed Doheny was killed at about the time the physician's car was turning.
