THE TINYMITES

What fun the Tinymites all had. Of course the bunch were very glad that they had met the coal men, and had found a little car. As Scooty pushed, and Coppy shoved they got a ride that they all loved. Then Coppy said, "I'm getting tired. I can't push any farther." One little coal man snapped reply, "Say, I'll jump out and gladly try to take my turn at pushing." "Course this made the Tinymites smile. Said Scooty, "That won't do at all. You're mighty kind, but much too small. You couldn't push this car, I fear, a quarter of a mile." Then Carpy said, "I'll lend a hand. I'm pretty sure I understand just how to keep the little car in motion. It's a cinch." He tried to push it all alone. "Twas funny how he'd puff and groan. And then somebody helped him 'cause it didn't move an inch. Away they went! The track ran straight, then quickly turned. Oh, it was great. The little coal men laughed in glee, and then began to hum: "Of course we never like to shirk, but we just ride while others work. For us it's naught but pleasure. Oh, we guess we're not so dumb." Just then a thunderous noise arose, and Scooty shouted, "Goodness knows what's happened just ahead of us. Keep going till we see." They shot around a little bend. A coal man shouted, "Here's the end of our nice ride until we work as hard as hard can be. "Much coal has fallen on the track. I'm sorry but we can't turn back. We'll have to shove it away. You Tinymites are strong. Please take the shovels from the car and work away just as you are. As soon as all the track is clear we'll travel right along."
