READ THE STORY, THEN COLOR THE PICTURE

Once more the Tynmites were alone. Said Clowzy, in a grieving tone, "Just think! With both the coal men gone, we can't know where we are. There's not a single one in sight. I surely hope that we're all right. This must be miles from where we were, 'cause we have traveled far."

"As I recall, not long ago the four of us were down below the ground, inside a little mine, and since we left that place, we've traveled down a long, long hill. We kept on going fast until we reached the spot that we're on now. Oh, what a useless chase."

"Don't be so silly," Scouty said. "Why stay right here? Let's move ahead and look around the country. We may find a town nearby. I'm just as hungry as can be, and food would look real good to me." "Don't mention food," cried Coppy, "cause it only makes me sigh."

And as they talked they walked along, though none of them felt very strong. "Course Clowzy dragged behind. He was a very lazy sort. 'My feet are getting tired,' said he. 'And, very frankly, I can't see why we don't stop a little while and rest. This is no sport.'"

Just then they heard a buzzing sound. The Tynmites stopped and looked around. "It came from in the air," cried one. "Can anybody see just what is flying round up there?" They all looked right up in the air. Then Coppy shouted. "There's a man. He's in a tub. Oh, gee!"

And sure enough, upon the breeze a tub was floating 'round with ease. It had some great big funny wings. It dipped from left to right. The man inside stood up and cried, "I see you, Tynmites. Don't hide, 'cause I'll be down to join you soon. I'm quite a funny sight."

(The Tynmites see a Goofygo in the next story.)
