SOCIETY

Clear and beautiful, Easter morn was heralded in the city. A day of service and special music was marked in the churches where folk gathered to celebrate the resurrection of Christ, an event which has been observed throughout the centuries.

he day was also one for the younger generation to remember, many families arranging for their children Easter egg hunts, or informal parties.

One of the foremost events was the annual Easter egg hunt at the Roseburg Country Club, where a large number of children of the members gathered for the much anticipated affair. The hunt opened at 2:30 o'clock and at the close the little folk were served refreshments in doors at tables, which held a hint of the season in the decorations. Later in the afternoon the older group gathered about the tea tables. In charge of the affair for the youngsters were Mrs. R. L. Whipple, Mrs. Chas. S. McElhinny, Mrs. Clair K. Allen, Mrs. Guy Corson, Mrs. Kenneth Quine and Mrs. Irvin Brunni.

OREGON STATE AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE, Apr. 1.—Marian Fisher of Roseburg presided at the Presbyterian easter services held in the Corvallis auto park Easter morning. Special music by the Presbyterian male quartet was featured. Hundreds of students attended these early Sunday morning ceremonies arranged by more than five student unions and Corvallis churches.

The Roseburg W. C. T. U. will hold a business meeting on Wednesday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock at the Roseburg Woman's club. The meeting which was to have been held with the missionary societies has been postponed until April 17.

A distinguished visitor entertained in the city March 29 was Anna H. Kaye of The Dalles, department president of the Spanish War Veterans Auxiliary. Mrs. S. W. Starmer entertained at dinner for Mrs. Kaye and Mrs. Hubert Wright at the Soldiers' Home that evening.

Mrs. Kaye was here to make arrangements for the state convention which is to be held in Roseburg in July.

Thursday evening the Elks club will have installation of new officers and as the Eugene lodge will have charge of the ceremonies there will be a large delegation from that city. In anticipation of this the Lady Elks club is planning for a special social event for that evening for the visiting ladies. Five hundred and besides are being planned. Mrs. Edw. Kohlbach is in charge of arrangements.

The Lady Elks club made arrangements this week to change the time for the gym classes from afternoon and evening to mornings and will meet Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock in the gymnasium for regular work. The group will meet at the same hour on Thursdays of each week, also.

Quite the largest and most elaborate event anticipated for this week is the Easter ball which will be this evening at the Oriental Gardens. The Umpqua Unit of the American Legion Auxiliary is sponsoring the function.

The hostess committee for the evening includes Mrs. Guy Corson, Mrs. Carl Wimberly, Mrs. E. B. Stewart, Mrs. Clair K. Allen, Mrs. Jay Fulcher, Mrs. H. C. Church, Mrs. Jas. Soules, Mrs. Geo. Caskey, Mrs. Rudolph Ritzman, Mrs. C. G. Gorthy and Miss Pearl Jones.

One of the affairs arranged for the close of Easter week is the benefit dinner at which the members of the Catholic Ladies Society will be hostesses on Saturday at St. Joseph's Parish hall.

The committee in charge of the event is meeting today to make final arrangements. Dinner will be served from 11:30 to 1:30 o'clock.

SCHOOLHOUSE PREY OF FIRE; LOSS IS $50,000

about four years ago. The building was two stories in height, and was fully equipped.

While the origin of the fire was not determined, Myrtle Creek people believe that it was started by the firebug who caused some heavy losses a few months ago.

The presence of a firebug was proven last summer when the old Central hotel, two residences, a barn, and several other buildings were burned in a series of fires that not only caused heavy losses, but also endangered the entire town.

In each case the time was about the same, and the similarity of each blaze indicated that all were of incendiary origin. An investigation was made but nothing was learned that would aid in locating the guilty person.

The schoolhouse fire has also failed to yield any clues regarding the identity of the firebug. It was learned that there were no fires in the building since Friday afternoon, following the close of school, and none of the school officials were in the building on Sunday.

The building represented an investment on the part of the district of approximately $50,000. The fire had progressed so far by the time it was discovered that it was impossible to save any of the books or personal effects of the pupils and teachers so that there was a great additional loss. The principal, H. F. English, lost all of his personal school library, which was of considerable value. The damage is partly offset by insurance in the sum of $37,500.

Will Use Churches An emergency meeting of the school board was held yesterday and arrangements were made to re-open school a week from today in the Baptist and Presbyterian churches. The pupils will have an opportunity to secure new books and materials during the intervening period.

While the loss of the building and equipment greatly handicaps the students, the board expects to carry on the work in the most efficient manner possible under the conditions. The old building housed both the high school and the grades.

Due to the fact that the gutted walls of the razed building were considered dangerous, they were blown down with dynamite today to prevent injury to persons inspecting the ruins.

THIS HAS HAPPENED The body of "Handsome Harry" Borden, promoter and ladies' man, murdered between half-past one and four o'clock Saturday afternoon, in the lobby of the closed airshaft window of his private office Monday by his secretary, Ruth Lester.

Detective McMann discovers that at least five people had opportunity, access to weapon and possible motive for the murder. These are Mrs. Elizabeth Borden, estranged wife of the victim; Ruth Lester, who admits ownership of a pistol which has disappeared from her desk; Benny Smith, office boy; Jack Hayward, insurance broker who offered $5000 to murder the airshaft, and Rita Dubois, a dancer.

Because of Borden's attempted familiarity with Ruth on Saturday, Hayward had threatened to kill the promoter. Although the airshaft window is closed, the bloody footprints of a pigeon inside and outside the window indicate it was open until after Borden's death.

Benny Smith, who has not reported for work, is sent for, as are Borden's Cassidy and Lott's Miller, scrubmen for the seventh floor. Bill Cowan strengthens suspicion against Hayward by telling of a telephone call to Hayward's offices Saturday at 2:10, when he was plugged in on a busy wire and heard Borden's voice raised in anger, presumably against Hayward.

Ruth Lester tells McMann about Cleo Gilman, recently discarded mistress of Borden, who she says being plucked by police. Rita Dubois arrives, admits to McMann she had planned to go away for the week-end with Borden, but when he failed to meet her at the station she had telephoned him, found his line busy at 2:10, then got him, and was requested to come to his office.

She says he was not there, his door locked. Ruth tells McMann of Borden's having given her the money for the torn bill, a yellow-backed bill but Borden's half of the bill is missing from his body, as well as $500 in smaller bills. About to question Rita about the bill, McMann receives a telephone message that Rita's night club, The Golden Slipper, has been robbed.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XXIV "Hello, can't McMann speaking," he detected in the surge of the investigation into the murder of Henry P. Borden greeted his superior on the other end of the wire. "The Golden Slipper's safe has been cracked, eh? ... Lose much? ... Hmm! Guess I know what graft to get into when I return from this game! ... What's that? A $500 bill, eh? ... When did she get it changed? ... McMann raised his pencil tapping steadily. "No use wasting time! Saturday morning Borden gave you half of a $500 bill. He kept the other half. He had bargained to give it to you when you had kept your promise to go to Winter Haven with him."

"In addition to the torn half of a $500 bill, Borden had more than $500 in smaller bills to pay for the weekend hunt. No money was found on his body this morning! You say you did not see Harry Borden Saturday afternoon, yet Saturday night, when the Golden Slipper opened at 11 o'clock, you were there with a $500 bill which had been torn in two and pasted together, and which you had the club manager change into smaller bills for you. Now—what's all that, and there's no use your denying any of it. What I want to know is—how did you get the other half of the $500 banknote? Come clean, Rita—and no hysterics!"

"Yes—it's all true, I lied. I did see Harry Borden Saturday afternoon."

remember I had it. I knocked and he let me in. He was expecting me, of course, but before he opened the door he asked 'who it was and when I shouted 'Rita,' he let me in."

"And then?" McMann grinned skeptically, as Rita paused. "What explanation did he give you for missing the train?"

Rita hesitated, flushed, then seemed to choose her words carefully. "He didn't give any explanation—just apologized, and promised to make it up to me. He—he seemed to be in a hurry to get me out of the office, as if he were expecting someone. I thought he'd been having a row with Cleo Gilman over the phone and that he was afraid she'd come while I was there. Harry and Cleo had been—friends for about a year before I met him. He had told me about her, said he was through with her."

"Did he mention Miss Gilman Saturday afternoon?" McMann interrupted.

"No, he didn't mention anyone's name, except Jake Bailey, who was always hanging around, like a bodyguard or something. I jokingly asked him if Jake was going to Winter Haven with us, and he said no, that Jake had left Friday night for a week-end visit with his people somewhere upstate—he didn't say just where," Rita answered, still in that careful, hesitating manner which was branding her as a liar in McMann's eyes, as Ruth could clearly see.

Her fear was confirmed when McMann asked, smiling, "What do you think he told you that Saturday afternoon, Rita? Wasn't it Saturday morning or Friday evening?"

"It was Saturday afternoon," Rita replied stubbornly.

"Borden was in a hurry to get rid of you but you took time to joke with him about Jake Bailey, eh?" McMann grinned. "All right, Rita, all right! Go on with your story. How did it happen to give you the other half of the $500 bill? Why didn't he wait until you were in Winter Haven? He wouldn't give it to you Saturday morning, remember?"

An ugly splotch of red suddenly glowed on the slim throat of the dancer. "I asked him for it, was pretty sure because he'd missed the train, and he wanted to make up with me, so he gave me the other half of the bill. I told him I might miss the 5:32 if he didn't—so he gave it to me."

McMann chuckled. "Just like that, eh? You make an awfully poor liar, Rita. ... Here! Keep your shirt on!" he commanded, as the dancer sprang toward him, her teeth bared, her slim, long fingers curved into talons. "So you went to the station to make the 5:32, did you, and he stood you up again?"

Rita hesitated again, then answered, desperately, angrily, "Yes, I did!"

McMann leaned back in his chair, grinning and nodding with what seemed to Ruth, like ghoulish satisfaction. "What do you think the police department has been doing all day, Rita? I'll tell you one little job they've cleaned up: you beat it from here, after stopping in the lobby to telephone someone, straight to the station, and took them to your hotel. And you didn't take them out again Saturday afternoon!"

"You did take out a small over-night bag about midnight Saturday, on your way to spend the night with your friend, Willet, Wilbur. Now how about it, Rita?"

"I was only going away with him to get the $500. I—I needed it, and I won't tell you why, if you kill me! After he'd given it to me, I didn't care what happened between him and me later. I was just happy that I didn't have to pay for it, by—by—"

She choked, and suddenly began to cry, her body without hiding her convulsed face.

"Listen, Rita," McMann urged, almost gently. "You've admitted you need $500 in a whole of a hurry, that you were willing to do almost anything to get it. Now admit just a little more and tell me the whole truth. I'll put it up to you straight: either Borden was alive when you came and you killed him—wait till I'm through!—killed him to get the money that would come too late if he waited until night to give it to you, or he was dead when you got here."

"No, wait! Isn't this what happened?—you came, got no answer to your knock, used Borden's pass-yes! just where you're looking," he interrupted himself, as the dancer's eyes involuntarily shot a glance of horror toward the spot where Borden had lain in death—"you remembered that he had the other half of the $500 bill he had given you; you looked for it, found it and more in smaller bills, took it all—over a thousand dollars counting your half of the bill—"

"No, no!" Rita screamed, beating the air with frantic, clenched fists. "I didn't rob a dead man! I'd die first! He was alive, I tell you—alive! He gave me his half of the bill, and not a cent more! Not a cent!"

Birdwell's weary, bored voice key, found him dead on the floor—from the doorway interrupted Rita's passionate avowal. "Ferber's here with the pictures of the fingerprints, sir. And Borden's manager, Ashe. Mrs. Borden's come back, too, sir."
