Have varied flavors on your table

One of the greatest joys in eating is in being able to taste first one flavor, then another—to contrast something sweet, for instance, after the delicate salt of some other food; or the clear tang of juicy fruit with a piece of cake.
 It is sugar that helps these delightful contrasts most. It lends emphasis to other flavors by the sweetness of its own. Then it does something more. It accents the true flavor of the food it blends with. A sprinkling of powdered or confectioners sugar over strawberries softens their acid, and clarifies their flavor. Or a small portion of sugar on peas in cooking, makes them taste more richly like peas.
 If you have varied health-foods on your table, you have varied flavors... milk, fruits, vegetables, cereals, meats, simple desserts. For greater joy in eating, flavor with sugar. The best cooks are generous with sugar. The Sugar Institute.

CORNMEAL MAY SERVE AS FUEL

Experiments with Coal And Wood Dust and Husks of Rice Also Succeed.
 (News-Review Douglas County Special.)
 RIDDLE, April 10.—The time is not far off when American farmers will use meal as fuel for their motors, says Rudolph Pawlikowski, head of the Kosmos Machine works.
 The forecast of the German motor engineer is based on 12 years' successful experiments with powdered fuels. He explains that his forecast is based on the ease with which meal may be employed. Vast crops of maize or sweet corn will furnish all the fuel needed by the simple expedient of grinding the residue in a mill and feeding the product into motors as fuel.
 Not only meal, but rice husks, pulverized coal, wood dust, char-

DOUGHNUT WEEK IS NEW FEATURE HERE

Do you remember the good old days when you came scampering home from school, happy, hungry and looking for something good? And once in a "blue moon" there were real old-fashioned doughnuts to greet you. What a thrill, then, certainly tasted good! Even to think of them, makes your mouth water.
 Gone are the days. But doughnuts still have the same tempting flavor, the same irresistible appeal to youngsters and grown-ups alike. Only nowadays, doughnuts aren't made... they just happen. In fancy colored packages. Instead of endlessly sifting, mixing, frying, instead of growing impatient over brown paper and scalding her fingers, the modern housewife confides in her grocer when she gets a hankering for really home-flavored doughnuts. Obliging he hands her a carton of six or twelve perfect doughnuts, temptingly brown and fresh as if from her own kitchen. And so to the present generation, any day is doughnut day, with all the old-time thrills.

coal and furnace coals have been used by Dr. Pawlikowski in his motor. The success and efficiency of these fuels is due to the fact that in the motor they explode by the heat generated by compression, without aid of a spark. Pawlikowski has adapted their use to a Diesel engine by a contrivance whereby the piston action compresses and explodes the powder in the firing chamber.
 Economy Chief Feature.
 Rice husks and peat did not at first appear readily combustible because of a comparatively large percentage of moisture, but after the watery ingredients had been extracted rice husks proved a valuable substitute for benzine as any of the other pulverized substances. The rice husks have the advantage of cheapness, Herr Pawlikowski estimating them at one-fifth of the price of benzine in Germany.
 To the existing assortment of vegetable fuels, others are constantly being added. Like sugar cane fiber. Even pulverized aluminum has been used. None of these fuels noticeably wears piston rings, Herr Pawlikowski says.
 A Diesel motor operated on any of these fuels, says Herr Pawlikowski, can continue to run smoothly for years. In confirmation he pointed to his 50 horse power Diesel motor, with which experiments on pulverized coal and vegetable fuels have been carried on for the past 12 years. The engine starts without any preparatory heating, used crms and offer special easy Pawlikowski says its coal dust fuel terms at this time on General Motors Finance plan.
