SMART SILHOUETTES ARE SEEN AT LUNCHEON

There's a Moral In Blouses--And New Chic Raincoats

By BETSY SCHUYLER
NEA Service Writer

NEW YORK, April 27.—It occurred to me (in the first place) a good moral lesson in the growing importance of blouses in the new mode.

It is this way. Blouses never had a thing to do with their increasing importance. It was the returning vogue for the jacket suit that gave them their place in the sun. Now that they have it, they can afford to be graciously beautiful and appealing. But the minute they get too self-important and leave out that gentle touch here and there that keeps them dependent upon the suit they complement they are no longer acceptable.

Perhaps it is rainy weather that makes me moralistic. Anyway, some women are improving each day in the art of really adding beauty to the landscape. Seeing Mrs. Finlay Westover in a gay checked plaid raincoat, black with a lot of bright reds, and with red accessories, made me realize that there need not be gloom when the skies are grey.

Styles That Begin in the Rain

New raincoats follow fashion lines as well as bright colors. Cape coats, smartly semi-fitted coats and coats with trick sleeves and collars are dotting Park Avenue as their wearers dart into Pierre's, Sherry's or merely take their constitutional right in the rain. Mrs. Robert Chandler has a light colored rain outfit, either lavender or light blue, I can't remember which.

Getting back to the blouses, Emily Marsual wore an egg-shell satin one that simulated the long tunic in its length. Susan Todd wore a pretty figured one with a worn outfit one day that was one of the best I saw this year to rely on its attractive material for beauty. It had a collarless neckline and was plainly tailored.

Mrs. Havemeyer Dotz, day walking on Park Avenue with her two children, little Madeline and Master Lawrence, wore a smart printed blouse with a jacket suit. It had a floral pattern in color against a beige front. Francesco Carey, lunching at Pierre's with Mrs. Goussney Curran, Jr., wore a charming ivory grey crepe blouse with a smart collar and tie ends. Dances That Put Milady in the Shade

Turquoise and pale blue were the favorite shades at a Park Avenue dance the other evening. In other colors the lace frock with and without sleeves had a preference. At a recent benefit at the Ritz Carlton, Frances Patten wore a lovely bright green color. Peggy Dimer looked her best in a soft green.

The diversity of silhouettes in the striking thing I notice in the luncheon hours along Park Avenue. Fannie Moore and Mrs. De Forest Alexander illustrated this the other day. The former wore a smartly tailored jacket suit with a panel of plicats on the left side and the jacket cut double breasted at the waistline, giving the slightly molded silhouette with flare at hip-line.

The Tubular Theme is Noted

Mrs. Alexander sponsored the tubular theme, with a long, slender-line coat and her skirt's pleats flaring very low. She wore a very chic hat, incidentally, with a big decorative bow on one side. Lillian Kent has a very smart little dressmaker suit that she wore lunching with Cynthia Pratt the other day. Its coat flares flares from the shoulders with a scarf collar and the coat is nice and full, due to some plicats that are just pressed in, not stitched. Cynthia Pratt's coat has a decided princess line, with flare. The colorful little frock under it tied its collar with a cute bow tie, a charmingly youthful thing for any collar to do.

Eugene to Enjoy Concert by Royal Belgian Band

UNIVERSITY OF OREGON, Eugene, April 27.—(Special)—Both symphonic and purely martial numbers will be on the program of the Royal Belgian band which will appear in concert in Eugene on May 2, according to advance notice received here. The band, under the direction of Captain Prevost, will play numbers such as Cesar Franck's "Symphony in D Minor," Mendelssohn's "Reformation Symphony," Bach's "Prelude and Fugue in A Minor."

The Royal Belgian band is the only symphonic organization of its kind in the world and its concert here consequently will be something new in the line of music. As early as 1830 the fame of the Musique des Gardes, as the band was then known, had spread throughout Europe and to America, and the group was scheduled to come to North America on tour. Besides planning to visit the United States all of the principal cities of Canada, Mexico and Latin America were to be ports of call. This proposed trip never materialized, and now, almost 100 years later, the symphonic band of the Royal Belgian Guards will make their first tour in this country.

Concert to Be Conducted by Alfred Hertz on Appearance Here

Alfred Hertz is the musical giant who will head the Philharmonic orchestra of Los Angeles here. It is fitting that an organization like the Philharmonic with a personnel composed of the most distinguished artists should be conducted by a man of the ability and experience of Hertz. For many years he was the first conductor of the German Repertoire of the Metropolitan Opera company of New York. Pivotal to that he had become known throughout Europe as a great conductor of both symphonic and operatic music. For the past several years Hertz has been the conductor of the well-known San Francisco Symphony orchestra. He also has the distinction of being the first conductor of the now celebrated Hollywood Bowl concerts. The music of the Philharmonic orchestra of Los Angeles have played often under the baton of Hertz. They are thoroughly familiar with his requirements and he is one of the greatest admirers of the worth and resourcefulness of this orchestra.

The combination of Hertz and Philharmonic orchestra at Los Angeles means superlative concerts in every city visited on this, the second annual of the northwest. The engagement of Alfred Hertz for this tour by W. A. Clark, Jr., and the management of the orchestra means that no expense is being spared to make the tour the most brilliant in the history of the west for Hertz is possibly the highest period conductor, with one or two exceptions, of the day. Hertz programs are famous for their compact, their color and for their insight into the composers' intent. Spectacular results may safely be forecast in this unique combination of orchestra and conductor.

The Woman's Day

BY ALLENE SUMNER

When Senator Hefflin's boy came home from a trip some place or other, he was in a condition unmistakably illegal in this Volstead era. He was criticized, laughed at, photographed, and generally lampooned for a state so common on incoming liners that it isn't even news.

It was news in this case because papa Hefflin has a little habit of criticizing other people, and because he is a most pro-dry himself. Therefore, argument went, give him a dose of his own medicine and show the public that what a man preaches isn't always practiced in his own family circle. Not that there's anything uncommon about this fact. Few, indeed, are the sons-or daughters—who are exactly "chips off the old block."

Real Dad

No matter who one thinks of the senator, or doesn't think there was something rather funny about his treatment of the whole matter. He met his son himself, though he knew, of course, that the flashlights would boom just as they did; he did not denounce nor disown him; his reaction was maternal rather than paternal, the latter, generally striking out even at its own young, when its own dignity is assailed.

The senator was exceptionally maternal when insisting that his son's vacarities were due, in all companions. These aren't a mother living who doesn't explain Billy's badness as the evil influence of the little boy next door.

Mr. Gann

Speaking of those in the public eye, what a patient long-suffering soul "Mrs. Gann's husband" must be. Though a good attorney in his own right, he can be nothing but just "Dolly Gann's husband" in Washington, for, he is not to the public, but not being in public life, he may get invited to a few not-to-official parties on the mere strength of being "Mrs. Gann's husband," but when he does, he can't sit next his wife nor even near her, how she could crow over him if she were the crowing sort, and what true magnanimity of spirit must exist on both sides to accept such a crowded situation.

"Because of Her"

And still speaking of those in the public eye, Mr. Connage confesses in his second confession that one major reason for his not choosing to run was because of the toll the White House takes from a First Lady.

Such consideration is only taken for granted in this day and age and in this country, but if you have any doubts as to any progress in woman's station in 1929, realize how many public men halt a century ago would take any decisive step in their own careers for such a reason, or, for that matter, how much such an argument would weigh in their considerations even today.

Stepmothers

A little 13-year-old girl in the day's news tried to kill herself because she learned that her "mother" was only a stepmother. How that stepmother and stepfather boogie prelates! May be because the booby is founded on truth in all too many cases. The annoyance of one's own offspring are almost unmeasurable at times, even with all the aid of the protective parental instinct. When appearances have no such armor, one cannot wonder at occasional outbreaks.
