The Woman's Day

BY ALLENE SUMNER

They sat opposite me in the limited diner, obviously mother and daughter. The daughter, smartly tailored, very much a woman of the world, a bit bored at the ordeal of ordering, handling the menu with expensively manicured fingers, challenging the waiter to "see that the fruit is well served." The mother was as obviously not a woman of the world, kind and pleased and very conscious of the fact that breakfasting on the limited with daughter both amused and even embarrassed in a sophisticated way at her mother's evident provincialism.

A most obsequious waiter here in "the grandest" The golden hair was resting on glossy bronze waves which, in turn, were topped with curls of crushed ice in deep silver bowls. He also bore in two dainty gold-edged plates, dolly-dressed, and proceeded to transfer the fruit from the ice-bowled bowls to the plates.

KNOWING GAL!

Daughter stopped him with an impudent gesture, proceeding to eat her fruit from the bowl, while her mother meekly submitted to the transfer to the plate. When the waiter had gone daughter waxed most articulate on what she described as "the adorning unnecessary gestures in dinner of hotel eating."

"It's perfectly obvious," she said, "that this fruit should be eaten from the dish with the ice in it rather than taken from the ice into a warm plate. Why, then, in the name of Tantalus, submit to some commercial concern's idea of what is good form? Look at these scrambled eggs; they bring them in on a silver platter, but insist that they be taken off onto a plate, even though the food gets cold in the transfer."

"But all those dishes look nice anyway," commented her mother,

Poppies to Bloom in Roseburg

"Forget them not! As years go by On our remembrance they rely. They are the maimed death did deny It's sad—crippled, blind, they lie To find on earth the peace they know In Flanders fields."

Every poppy worn next week on a coat lapel means that the wearer has thought of the boys who sleep beneath the poppies in the far away fields of Flanders. That we are thinking of the budding who did not pay the supreme sacrifice but who came home maimed and are still fighting a long hard battle.

Many stories are brought of the "poppies of Flanders." The little flower has grown in popularity and has become enshrined in the hearts of the American people as sacred. A bit of the history of the flower has been told. On November 9, 1918 Miss Moins Michael serving on the staff of the Y. W. C. A. in France read a copy of the poem "In Flanders Field" by Col. John McCrae. Touched by the reference to poppies growing beneath the crosses row on row she wrote a poppy in honor of the dead. This is said to be the beginning of the custom in memory of the men who gave their lives in the World War. The American Legion and auxiliary serving in time of peace, as well as in time of war, brought a greater meaning and developed the poppy sale into a great national program. It commemorates the sacrifice of those who are being brought aid to those who are being detained after years of peace in veterans' hospitals are still serving. They have made the poppies and on May 28 and 29 the local auxiliary of the Legion will offer a symbolic flower for sale. We have told you the story of the poppy. The Legion does not seek to benefit itself, the injured and the needy are their care. They deserve help.

May the poppies bloom over every heart in Roseburg on Memorial Day.

June Brides to Go Away in Varied Modes

This June's bride has a head start towards chic, for going-away costumes never were lovelier. (Left to right) A stunning suit of black flat crepe has a gloriously colorful overblouse cut like a man's shirt and fashioned of chartreuse, orange and melon-colored silk. Feminine, lively and colorful is an emerald green flat crepe suit with a cute cape coat and pleated skirt. The blouse is chartreuse chiffon, exquisitely pleated. The fisherman's hat is green felt. Pleasantly novel is the lacquer red and black ensemble. The frock of red flat crepe has a pleated peplum and panel effect that is grided by a wide, gleaming black satin belt. Black gloves and a black felt hat with a perky bow in front make an interesting contrast. The coat is black satin.

A Note of Femininity Is Predominant

BY JULIA BLANSHARD
NEW YORK Service Writer

NEW YORK, May 25.—The going-away costume in a definite challenge to every June bride. Its importance cannot be over-emphasized. For it is in this costume that the bridegroom first really sees his bride. There was such a vish at the church he was confused. At the reception there were so many folks around he couldn't get a good look at her.

Now, with the utmost swiftness to sea, or the train well on its way, he draws a deep sigh that he off and turns to gaze at this new wife of his. Of course she must look her very feminine best.

Going Away in Height of Chic

This year it shouldn't be a difficult feat. Brides have a world of beautiful costumes from which to choose. Each bride easily can capitalize the importance of this occasion and put herself over dominantly and finally with her new husband as a stunning woman if she selects her costume carefully.

She has the choice of ensemble or suit. Her figure, age, height and destination should determine her choice. If the honeymoon leads towards Europe, a wool coat should top her costume; if a motor trip, the choice of a silk suit is excellent; if a train trip, a silk ensemble is good taste.

Whatever she decides upon, she should be tailored in consummate taste but very feminine-looking. Paris softens all its tailors this season, and Paris can give useful hints on what men prefer. A little lace touch, a soft chiffon blouse, a silk that is gleaming and fine all have their contribution to make.

The psychology of color should be considered, too, in the selection of this all-important costume. A bride should search her mirror and decide just what shade will bring out that natural bloom in her cheeks, those golden lights in her hair, or, if she is brunette, what colors make her hair that enviable blue-black.

The bridal wardrobe should be gay but not gaudy. A black suit with red and white accents is the latest. Dame Fashion's most successful contribution to getting a bride started towards making her husband proud of her loveliness. Now reds for summer eliminate the glaring effect that two much yellow gives and leave delectable shades. Greens for summer vie with the frocks in their intensity.

audience listened to the pupils. The church was lovely with spring blossoms used in decoration. Miss Merle Branch and Miss Beva Neal acted as ushers.

The gold banding pin was presented to Missie Stevens, Arba Day Stearns and Albert Chamberlain, who have unobtrusively completed the Dunning System of Improved Music study.

A second group was presented on Wednesday evening in gathering at the J. G. Cooper residence. The spacious rooms were beautifully decorated for the occasion with roses and sweet peas in profusion. An enthusiastic and profitable assembly gathered for the evening. Group and piano solos were features of the evening. The graduating singing class included Ruby Colver, Rayburn Ross and Donald Ross.

Miss Raymond will also be here, giving latest marcel and finger wave, pleasing to your contour.

There's a Choice of Suit or Ensemble

The best blues have a course between navy and Patou blue. Three distinguished going-away costumes give the June bride a diversity of styles, color, fabrics. Each is excellent for certain types of beauty and for different kinds of wedding trips.

Tailored Outfits Are Smart

Lucky the bride whom tailored clothes set off to advantage. For her there is "Gypsy," a stunning outfit. Its accented pleated skirt is black flat crepe, its straight line long coat is the same or may be of worsted for ocean travel. Its blouse is a veritable work of art in the way it combines chartreuse, melon and orange that crepe in modernistic manner to fashion a man's shirt that has true feminine chic. Bands of the same shades of velvet hug the hips of this skirt. Its tie is a flowing black flat crepe one.

The hat is a vagabondish model with wide, rolling brim, banded with narrow strips of the three shades of silk braided and tied in a small knot on one side. The choice of hats is of real importance, for a hat can embrace a woman's beauty or kill it.

For the blonde or the brunette who wears green well, there is a sweet suit of emerald green flat crepe with an adorable little blouse.

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Harding and Mrs. Mary Harding of this city and Mrs. D. A. Butler and Harry Butler of St. Paul, left here the first of the week for southern California on a vacation trip. They will spend ten days in southern cities.
