FRENCH PLANE FINALLY HOPS OFF FOR PARIS

twisted to the right at that moment and entered into a nose-over.

The rear part of the fuselage near the tail assemblage was badly dented and the left wing torn. The engine over the motor also was badly dented.

Gasoline leaked from the tanks and spread about the ground and the through about the plane was pushed back to fear some one might toss a lighted cigarette or match on the sand and ignite the fuel.

The coast guard amphibian piloted by Lieut. L. M. Naika which accompanied the Yellow Bird at the start returned above the beach 49 minutes later.

The coast guardmen in charge of a portable short wave receiving set here said that Malla had reported the Yellow Bird at 100 miles out was 2,000 feet up and going strong.

GOOD-NIGHT STORIES By Max Trull

"THE PIGEON COULD BE EATING STILL, IF ONLY IT HAD A SOFTER BILL"

Mrs. Flor, Handl, Yam and Knarf—the little shadow-children—were at the park with their mothers and mistresses. They were walking right in front of the little bird-children. It wasn't because they wouldn't factor than the real children. Oh, no, not at all. It was merely that the sun was shining in back of the real-children and the shadows, who dressed the sun, put themselves in front of them to shield themselves from its rays.

"Where are we going?" asked Yam.

"We're going to the lake," said Handl.

"The lake's the other way," put in Flor. "We're going to see the autumn."

"Of course we are," added MIJ, who being Flor's twin, always found it easy to agree with him.

"I don't like any of the places we're going to," Knarf announced. "I'm going down this path into the woods."

Just as he said this the children turned down the other way and Master Knarf had to run along, despite his unwillingness. "Oh!" exclaimed Yam. "I thought you were going to the woods."

"I changed my mind," he retorted.

"Are they fresh?" asked the Pigeon

"Look at the pigeons!" exclaimed the shadows. The pigeons scurried out of the children's way, then turned to watch them, hungrily.

The children stopped, too, and little Frank, who was Knarf's master, held out his hand with bread-crumbs. The pigeons glanced at it suspiciously.

"Why don't you go up to his hand?" urged the shadows.

"Bread-crumbs are very nice," said Knarf.

"It's a trick to catch me," said the pigeon, who knew only too well the habits of some little boys.

"Oh, no, my master would never do that!" exclaimed Knarf indignantly. At this the pigeon stepped a bit closer to Frank's hand.

"Are they fresh bread-crumbs?" asked the pigeon.

"Very fresh," answered Knarf, although he didn't know. "They were just baked this morning."

"I think I'll try a crumb," said the pigeon. "You're sure it's no trick?" Knarf nodded vigorously.

With that the pigeon drew cautiously up to Frank's hand, peered at the crumbs first with one eye and then with the other and at length gave a quick peck. Its bill was sharp, however, and little Frank uttered a sharp cry, which so frightened the pigeon that it flew off at once. The crumbs scattered all over the ground and the sparrows ate them while the pigeon looked on enviously.

"That's what you get for having such a hard bill," cried Knarf.

"You could be eating still," said Flor.

"If only you had a soft bill," said MIJ.
