IMMIGRATION QUOTAS

THE Chicago Journal of Commerce characterizes as "the first major defeat the president has suffered" the failure of congress to repeal the national origins clause of the immigration act.

Senator Reed, who led the opposition to repeal, said in the course of the senate debate that:

The issue is fundamental. Nothing could be more vital than the making up of the future population of this country, and the decision of congress with respect to the national origins law will affect the destinies of our country and the welfare of our people for generations to come.

Anyone not knowing on which side of the discussion these words were uttered could not possibly tell whether they were applied for or against national origins clause. They would apply with equal force either way.

THE HIGHER REALM OF EXCHANGE

This interesting news story comes from New York: Cultivation of closer intellectual and cultural relations between the United States and Latin American countries is provided for by a gift of $1,000,000 just made by Mr. and Mrs. Simon Guggenheim to the John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Foundation.

How good to see these men of trade Reveal these dreams of higher grade; Who take the wealth they've dug from mines, Investing it in spirit lines!

They dream of trade in higher realm, With wisdom sitting at the helm; They'd take experience in exchange— Which is to them no longer strange.

We're proud of noble Guggenheims, Who've gathered wealth in many climes, For that rare wisdom that expends In making nations better friends.

A man's hardest competitor ought to be himself.

It is no longer funny for a woman to run for office, but she still looks as funny as ever when running for a street car.

About the only time a man shows as much bare arms as a woman does when she is out in public is when he is taking a bath.

ACTOR PORTRAYED AS JAILED DEBTOR SUES FOR $200,000

LOS ANGELES, July 1.—James Cruze, artist of motion picture directing, and John Becker, artist of the brush and easel, disagreed over art. Today Cruze sued Becker for $200,000 damages.

The suit was based on a portrait of Becker which pictured the subject in a prison cell. Cruze refused to accept the portrait, whereupon, he claims, Becker placed it in a Hollywood art store and entitled it "James Cruze—in prison for debt."

Not only was his position in the picture objectionable, Cruze alleged, but "I was the most surprised man in the world when I saw it. Mouth like a gasp, face like a frog; it made me look

GOOD-NIGHT STORIES

THE SHADOW-CHILDREN CALL ON GASPARD THE GOLDFISH

You may think it great fun to poke your finger into the goldfish bowl. Perhaps it is great fun—but what about the goldfish? And what if the goldfish has company?

It happened one day that Mr. Flor, Hanid, Yam and Knarf—the five little shadow-children with the turned-about names—passed the aquarium in which Gaspard, the goldfish, lived.

"Good-morning," greeted the shadows. "How are you?" "I'm quite well," said Gaspard. "That is I think in quite well."

"Aren't you sure?" asked Hanid in surprise. "No—I'm not sure of anything. You see, I'm all alone here. Whom can I ask if I'm right or not?"

"You can ask yourself," said Knarf. "But he didn't hear the little shadow-boys."

"Have you all had your breakfast?" he inquired. The shadows nodded. "Hm, that's too bad, because a fine big piece of crumb fell down in among the pebbles and I thought, if you were hungry, you might search around for it. And after you found it you might give me half and keep the rest for yourselves."

"It's too bad that we've all had our breakfasts," said Mr. Jermis. "Yes, it is too bad, I can't help regretting E. Well, maybe you'll be hungrier later on. Have you been around my garden yet?" "We've seen it from the outside."

"Oh, it's much different inside. Jump on my back and I'll take you around."

The shadows jumped on Gaspard's back. "Hold on firmly to my back fin," he cautioned them. "My back's pretty slippery." They discovered that soon enough. His back was most extraordinarily slippery. But by dint of grasping his back fin as he advised them, they managed to stay on.

"Here is the castle," he announced. "Do you like it?" "It's very big," said Hanid. "And it has an archway," said Flor.

"And it's covered with moss," said Mr. Jermis. "And it's made of stone," said Yam.

"And it has a high tower," said Knarf. "Yes," said Gaspard, "but it doesn't belong to me."

"It doesn't," they exclaimed. "It belongs to that mermaid, who is sitting on top of the tower."

"I can't see her," said Knarf. "I'll take you up to the surface. Then you'll be able to see her plainly. But be sure to hold on."

"Perhaps we wouldn't go. We might fall," said Hanid. "Oh, no, just hold on." Then up they went. "There—now you can see her—"

HEALTH IS DEPENDENT ON REAL CLEANLINESS

There Cannot Be Perfect Health Without Perfectly Functioning Skin. Says Dr. Copeland, So Keep It Thoroughly Clean.

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D. United States Senator from New York. Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

It is hardly more than a century ago that the citizen of Boston was not permitted to take two baths a week without a doctor's order.

A thing that holds the attention of a visitor to any of the old castles and palaces of Europe is that no provision was made for bathing. Taking a bath in olden times was something of a domestic ordeal. It upset the discipline of the entire retinue of servants.

Today in some foreign lands it requires an order in advance to get the water into one of those great marble tubs. It is filled from basins carried by hand. I shall never forget the stitches of laughter caused by the description given by a doctor friend of mine of his experiences in getting a bath in a distant country.

Saturday night bathing continues to be a custom in many parts of America. You recall the old joke of the man who could hardly wait till Saturday to try his new bathtub.

Cleanliness is a matter of the greatest importance. Not only the exposed portions of the body, but every other part should be submitted to the wash and frequent cleansing.

It takes scrubbing as well as soap and water to take the dirt from the skin. It is not at all unusual to observe a dirty neck. The cheeks and forehead of that person may shine from efforts at cleansing, but behind the ears there will be a month's accumulation of dirt.

There cannot be perfect health without a perfectly functioning skin. The skin cannot play its part unless it is thoroughly clean. That is the first essential.

Select a good soap, one that agrees with your skin; apply it with a clean wash cloth. Then with an abundance of water you may hope to give yourself real cleanliness.

I am more and more impressed with the thought that we really neglect the skin. Half the time certainly the irritations of the face and neck are founded on lack of cleanliness.

Sun and air and water, soap and scrubbing, good food and sound living—these are the secrets of a good complexion.

A—No. Yellow oxide of mercury used one per cent strength is also helpful for the purpose you have in mind. SALLY L. Q.—What can be done for an oily complexion?
