GOOD-NIGHT STORIES

By Max Trell

MJ TRIES TO HELP MASTER JIM IN SCHOOL.

Jim's shadow, MJ, like to be helpful to his master. But he didn't always succeed. At least he didn't on this occasion, as you shall soon see.

MJ accompanied his little master to school, just as Flor, Hamd, Yam and Knart—the other little shadow-children with the reversed names—accompanied their masters and mistresses. Once they reached school, the shadows either sat under the real children's desks, or else stood up against the wall, as flat as can be. Teacher didn't mind them because they remained as still as pins. Even when they spoke no one heard them, for shadow-language is as quiet as a thought.

He came to the Big Map. on May first. She said: "Miss May, what is the capital of the United States?"

"Washington," she replied promptly.

"That's correct. And now, Master Frank, in what state is Washington?" Teacher smiled stily as she said this. There was a catch in the question, you see. Frank thought and thought.

"I don't know," he said at last.

"That's all right," said the teacher. "You'll find out soon enough."

"I'm printing at it," cried MJ.

This didn't help at all. His master simply couldn't make it out. At length the teacher said: "It's plain you don't know as much about Washington as I supposed."

Master Jim took his seat again, feeling very sad. And his shadow MJ felt even more sad than he did.

SALEM, Ore., July 10.—The "Angelino," airplane with which L. W. Mendell and R. B. (Pete) Reinhardt have shattered the world's endurance record at Culver City, Cal., may be seen here at the dedication of Salem's new airport on August 8—if the two fliers decide to land before that date. Capital Post No. 9, American Legion, of which Reinhardt is a member, has sent the two fliers an invitation to bring the plane to Salem for that event.
