Suit for Annulment
It is reported that annulment proceedings have been instituted by the parents of Natalie Guggenheim Gorman, above, 18-year-old bride, against her husband, Thomas Gorman, below, young real estate operator of Long Island. Shortly after their secret marriage, Natalie was spirited to Europe by her parents who have never given their approval of the marriage. Irreconcilable religious differences are said to have been the chief reason for the objections.

The Skyscraper Murder

by SAMUEL SPEWACK

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE
Philip Edison is hot at a night club party to his just-recently divorced wife and Oliver Sewell, sportswoman and Don Juan. Edison promises that Sewell and the divorcee are to be married. When the party breaks up, Edison goes to Sewell's home and, while he is awaiting his return, is informed that Sewell has been found dead. Inspector Marx begins a police investigation. He questions Sewell's Italian valet. The elevator operator is also questioned. He did not see Sewell return. A young medical examiner, who is made for detective work, assists Marx. Their search of the apartment reveals complete wardrobes in different colors for women. In a safe-deposit box they find a scrap of paper bearing the inscription, "Paid in Full." The following day a Major Preston, who has been a sporting associate of Sewell's, is interrogated. Then Sewell's widow visits the apartment. She intimates that Preston might know something. As the investigators are standing, after Mrs. Sewell's departure, looking at a mirror door, it opens, and Mrs. Edison appears. She relates a story which the police do not believe. After she leaves, her lawyer threatens Marx with political reprisals if the woman is molested. Then Edison visits the apartment. A shot is heard. The Russian butler is found dead and Edison is arrested.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY
CHAPTER XI
The detective who had brought Edison now ran to the front door to admit five policemen. "One of you stays right at that terrace door," ordered Marx.
"You," he singled them out, "stand outside this door, and don't let anyone out, except with my permission. You, get on the floor below. You two wait downstairs. Now beat it!"
The uniformed men saluted and took their posts.
"If that don't bottle the building up, I'd like to know what will," said Marx. "Here—" he turned to the detective. "Go through him."
The detective searched the bewildered Edison.
"I'm looking for a gun," said Marx.
"But I assure you," the young man said earnestly, "I haven't a gun. I did have one—that night, but I threw it away."
The detective's search bore out the truth of the statement.
"Take him down to the D. A.'s office," Marx commanded.
"Am I under arrest?" the young man's voice quivered.
"You're under arrest," said the detective, dazed, grief-stricken, entered the corridor.
"I'm arresting you for murder," barked Marx, "and anything you say will be taken down."
The girl ran towards Edison, but Marx jerked her back.
"All right, take him away," he shouted.

THE MAJOR DENIES
As was to be expected, the account of young Edison furnished the story of the day for the news papers. The tabloid listed broadly at the domestic scandal in volent, and published composite photographs.
An enterprising reporter not wild of the presence of Mary Pennell, a little judicious inquiry placed her in the scandal definitely and overnight she was known as the "Woman in Gold".
Criticism of the police was stifled. The newspapers had obtained action, with the result that Marx and the District Attorney's office found themselves busily engaged in drawing a net of evidence against Edison.
But as Doctor Rhinewald told Marx after these conferences there was one loophole for Edison which the police must stop before they had a case against him.
"And that loophole, Inspector, is the simple fact that at the time the murder was committed, or rather discovered, young Mr. Edison was twenty-six stories from the scene. And furthermore, every moment of his time can be accounted for."
"Yes? How about the shooting of the butler? He was right there." "And you found no weapon on him." "He might have hidden it." "He hardly had time to do it. Now come, Inspector, you don't really think that Edison is a murderer?" Marx smiled slowly. "No, I don't," he said finally. "Then you're only arresting him to give the real criminal a chance to expose himself?" "Sure." "Well, then, tell me this, Inspector: Do you think that the man who killed Sewell killed the butler, or are you regarding them as two separate cases?" "Well," said Marx, "it's past thinking about it now. They've studied the bullets in each case. The markings show they came from the same revolver. So it's a chance the same man did it." The doctor nodded vigorously. "And that man was hidden in the apartment while we were there?" Marx looked at the doctor ruefully. "Don't I know it!" "But where?" "As nearly as I can make out, in the butler's room." "I guess he knew a lot more than he told us," growled Marx. "It ought to be a lesson to those who don't come clean with the police. It pays to come clean." "Yes," agreed the doctor dryly. "That's the great moral lesson involved. But what is your next step?" "How do I know?" demanded Marx. "Everybody's busy on some angle of the case. We've got fifteen men working on it. All I can do is to wait and see." "What's happening to Miss Pennell?" asked the doctor. "Nothing much," said Marx. "You know," ventured the Doctor, "I think I'd like to talk with the young lady." "Go ahead," invited Marx with the two separated. So the doctor halted a cab and asked to be driven to a highly proper, all-women's hotel where Miss Pennell was stopping. He waited for her in the lounge, and when she appeared, he found a corner in the writing room where they could talk undisturbed. The doctor observed and under the girl's eyes. Apparently the strain of the past few days was too much for her. He sympathized with her in her predicament. "Oh, it's been too awful!" she cried, and the doctor could see she was trying hard not to weep. "Everything's smashed now, and I know I can't do it." "You are not alone in that," said the doctor. "The police know he didn't do it." "Yes?" Her eyes shone suddenly with a new hope. "Oh, yes," the doctor assured her. "He'll be out of the Tomb in twenty-four hours." "Oh, you don't know what it means to me!" Now the girl began to weep softly in relief. "I think you can trust me," said the doctor. "I've no desire, as you see, to get anything out of you but the truth. And since Edison is innocent, the truth can only help him."

"But what can I tell you?" "For one thing, how your clothes happened to be in Sewell's chest. You don't mind my bluntness?" "No," said the girl. "I know that it looks too awful for me. As if I—but I tell you, I don't know. I've only spoken to Sewell several times, and I never paid the least bit of attention to him. Once at a party, everyone came to tell me how awfully impressed he was with me, but I never liked him from the moment I saw him, and his approval didn't mean anything to me. Finally he came over to me to talk, and he began to talk clothes. He mentioned a certain dressmaker. I'd just come to New York, and I had meant to get some clothes, so I went there. I ordered some gowns, but they were never delivered to me. I called up several times, but I never got a very satisfactory answer. I just didn't bother. I went to another shop, and got my clothes there. I don't know how Sewell got hold of them unless—

"Unless he got them from your dressmaker who couldn't deliver your gowns," demanded the doctor. "But why?" demanded the girl. The doctor shrugged his shoulders. "I guess he had his reasons. Now, Miss Pennell—that clears up one point—to my satisfaction at least."

LAKE COUNTY ASSESSOR JAILED IN PORTLAND
(Associated Press Special Wire)
PORTLAND, July 19.—Alleged issuance of checks upon a non-existent account to a total of $600 today put C. C. Mahan, 46, Lake county assessor, behind the bars of the Portland jail. Mahan lives in Lakeview. He was arrested on a vagrancy charge.
Mahan was arrested in front of a downtown hotel as he was leaving for home. He had been in Portland six weeks and, police said, issuing checks on the Lakeview bank to pay his way. All checks came back marked "Account closed."

Mahan, detectives said, admitted passing the checks and was quoted as saying he is "sorry." He was set at $250 and he will have a hearing Monday.

GIRL WITNESS IN NOTED CASE COMITS SUICIDE
(Associated Press Special Wire)
ALBUQUERQUE, N. M., July 20.—Fay Graves, former inmate of the New Mexico girls' welfare home and chief witness in the "Twilight sleep" investigation last January, which resulted in the removal of Superintendent Bertha Lipps and the appointment of a new board of control, was fatally shot yesterday with the revolver of Deputy Sheriff Earl Rice, who was taking her home from a dance. Rice said the girl committed suicide.

The district attorney said he was confident the girl killed herself.
