

FLIERS' ROUTINE OF DAILY LIFE IS CAREFULLY MAPPED

ST. LOUIS, July 25.—The routine of "life in the air" for Dale (Red) Jackson and Forest O'Brien, who now are flying their "St. Louis Robin" in its twelfth day, is something like this:

They take turns at the stick, each piloting the plane for four hours at a stretch. The man off duty usually climbs onto a rubber mattress atop the gasoline tank at the rear of the plane and stretches full length in sleep. If anything goes wrong with the motor, the man off duty is awakened and climbs out onto the "catwalk" to make repairs. It is estimated that each flier gets 8 to 10 hours sleep each day.

Every morning Jackson makes a careful motor inspection. They have changed spark plugs and cleaned the magnetos at least once. Each man receives two meals daily—a hearty breakfast of ham and eggs, coffee, toast; and an evening meal usually of roast chicken and potato salad, prepared by Mrs. O'Brien, the stewardess of the flight. O'Brien consumes two packs of cigarettes a day and Jackson gets two cigars. The work of refueling, taking on other supplies and making repairs is their exercise.

FIRST FOREST FIRE OF SEASON IS ON UPPER COW CREEK

The first forest fire in the county this season occurred yesterday on the head of Cow Creek. The origin of the fire is unknown, but it is believed to have been started by a careless smoker. The fire burned over about 150 acres of second growth timber. A crew of eight men was sent out by the Douglas fire patrol and succeeded in checking the blaze within a short time.

MILL WORKER INJURED

PENDLETON, Ore., July 25.—Frank Hutchinson, one of the Pendleton flour mills, suffered two brown legs last night when a large belt he was adjusting to a pulley slipped off and struck him. The belt broke both Hutchinson's legs below the knees and threw him upon some other machinery. He managed to drag himself clear of danger and to call for help.

YOU MAY TRY a cigarette for any one of a thousand reasons—but you'll continue to smoke it for its taste.

And if, along with mild and pleasing taste and aroma, you get that satisfying quality which tobacco men call "character," you are getting everything—no cigarette can give you more.

It's all in Chesterfield, because the good tobaccos are blended and cross-blended, the standard Chesterfield method. One rule governs every step:

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE.

Phillip Edison is host at a night-club party to his just-recently-divorced wife and Oliver Sewell, sportswoman and Don Juan. Edison presumes that Sewell and the divorcee are to be married. When the party breaks up, Edison goes to Sewell's home and, while he is waiting his return, is informed Sewell has been found dead. Inspector Marx begins a police investigation. He questions Sewell's Russian valet. The elevator operator is also questioned. He did not see Sewell return. A young medical examiner, with a taste for detective work, assist Marx. Their search of the apartment reveals complete wardrobes for women in different colors. In a safe deposit box they find a scrap of paper bearing the inscription, "Paid in Full." The following day a Major Preston, who had been a sporting associate of Sewell's, is interrogated. Then Sewell's widow visits the apartment. She intimates that Preston might know something. As the investigators are standing, after Mrs. Sewell's departure, looking at a mirror door, it opens, and Mrs. Edison appears. She relates a story which the police do not believe. After she leaves, her lawyer threatens Marx with political reprisals if the woman is molested. Then Edison visits the apartment. As he goes out a shot is heard. The Russian butler is found dead, and Edison is arrested. Mary Pennell, whose clothes are found in the apartment, is questioned. She identifies the "paid in full" note as her uncle's, the Major's handwriting. A diary belonging to the dead butler is found. It relates a story of the famous Sindh diamond which came into his hands in Russia while Sewell was there.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XV.

Her blue-green eyes glowed with the intensity of the jewel as she held it in her white hands. She uttered a low moan of delight. "But for God's sake," I cried, "we must hide it before they come."

Nina did not seem to hear me. She continued to stare, fascinated at the stone. I snatched it from her. Furious she seized my hand, and demanded it back.

"Don't be a fool!" she whispered. "Sewell—he is an American. They will never suspect him. He will hide it for us."

An inspiration, I thought. Sewell would be the ideal custodian of the jewel.

"He will take it out of the country," she said. "We will meet him at the border, and he will give it back to us. We shall be so rich we can buy a big house in Paris, a villa in Capri. Oh, Ivan, we can be so happy!"

It was a glorious picture, so painted, and I seemed to see its bright colors mirrored in that magic stone which could heal all the disasters of fortune, all the woes of revolution, all the treachery of mankind. Then I was brought back to my senses.

"But at any moment they may be here. Where is Sewell's room?" I asked.

"Don't worry," she advised me, and kissed me tenderly. "Just go out into the corridor as if you know nothing at all. Let them search you. Tomorrow come back here, and I shall tell you the news."

The voices of the soldiers came nearer at that moment. I opened the door and stepped out into the corridor.

Immediately I was seized upon by the soldiers and roughly cross-questioned. I explained sullenly I was a carpenter, assigned to repairs in the building. They searched me, and then apparently satisfied let me go.

Then I heard them knocking at Nina's door. I pretended to be examining the wallpaper, and waited in agony. Minutes passed, but they seemed hours to me. Then I heard the soldiers leave her room. The procedure to the next. I breathed a sigh of relief. Somehow Nina had managed to dispose of the diamond.

I didn't know that Sewell's room was next to hers, and that the doors opened.

Then I made my way out of the hotel and walked back to my humble quarters. There I waited and dreamt of the fortune to come.
