LIONS' CLUB SIGN AGAIN

IN SPITE of the fact that the Lions' club sign at the intersection of Winchester and North Jackson streets was very largely responsible for Captain Winch's visit up the North Umpqua, there is renewed agitation to have it removed or its location changed. It is beautifully located where it is and, whether you believe it or not, it does not and will not cause anyone harm. The matter was settled once. The sign and its location was thoroughly viewed by the city officers. The decision of the mayor and the council was that the sign was located in such a manner as to be effective in its purpose and not harmful to adjacent property owners. What more can be done? Such things as this are extremely discouraging to men who are working hard for the good and advancement of the Umpqua Valley. We need more of the spirit displayed by the men who erected the sign. Such spirit, however, is bound to be held in check as the result of such an experience as this. No person wishes to make a sacrifice in time and money for the good of the community only to be compelled to defend his action. Permission was obtained by the Lions to erect the sign. It was inspected and approved after its erection. It is a fine thing and has demonstrated its ability to attract the traveler. Let's leave it alone.

Grover Whalen, New York's highly advertised police commissioner, not long ago got a good deal of fun out of the fact that the London police still use bicycles in making their daily rounds. He seemed to feel that this compared rather poorly with the snappy, fast-moving motorcycles of the American cop.

However, the London officers seem to travel faster on bicycles than our American police can go on their motorcycles. At any rate—

During 1928 there were just 18 murders in London. The police solved every one. Eleven of the murderers were arrested, tried, convicted and sentenced, and the other seven committed suicide.

Compare these figures—not with New York's, for the contrast would be too staggering; with some lesser city, like Kansas City, for instance. Kansas City, in 1928 had 105 murders. Twenty-three murderers were tried, convicted and sentenced; five were acquitted; and the rest seem to have escaped altogether.

An American police official who laughs at the London force is showing extremely poor judgment.

POEM FOR THE DAY

By LOUIS ALBERT BANKS

A FIGHTER BELOVED

The radio brings this story from the British House of Commons in London:

"T. P. O'Connor, 'Tay Pay,' the veteran journalist who is affectionately known as 'the Father of the House of Commons,' where he has been a member 44 years received a tribute from the members of all political parties here to . . . term of a deed for a trust fund to provide for the evening of his days.

"Presenting it on the Terrace of the House of Commons in the presence of the Prime Minister and the Liberal representatives, Lord Birkenhead, who represented the Conservatives, recalled Mr. O'Connor's distinguished journalistic career, during which he founded the Sun, the Star, 'M. A. P.' and T. P.'s Weekly.

"Lord Birkenhead added: 'It is just because he has been so busy thinking and writing about other people that he has never found time for thinking or writing for himself that we are asking his acceptance of this gift.'"

This is the song of brave "Tay Pay",
A fighter till he's old and gray,
A gallant fighter all life long—
He comes from Ireland, land of song,
A fight's the very air he breathes;
His valiant spirit fairly seethes;
So fair he fights, so plays the game,
That all the parties love his name.

He never shot a poisoned shaft,
Would give his foe a healing draught,
Has shown so brave and true a heart
His fighting is chivalric art.
And now that he is old and gray,
The British world adores "Tay Pay";
It rises up to call him great,
Combines to give him kindly fate.

And so from all the Britich Isles
O'Connor meets with friendly smiles
They call him, lovingly, "Tay Pay",
And have the kindest words to say;
They say them with their pence and pounds,
And with their gold their love resounds;
They think of him in terms of care,
Are glad to in his comfort share.

The world reveres the fighting man
Who never from a conflict ran,
Who gets no wounds except in front,
And bravely stands to bear the brunt;
And that's the secret of his fame,
The reason why they love his name;
That's why they'll always tell his story
And clothe his honored name with glory.

Good Manners

By MRS. CORNELIUS BECKMAN

The "Draping Era" Is Over.

DEAR MRS. BECKMAN:
1. When is correct for a man to take a woman's arm while walking or for a woman to take the male arm?
2. Will you please enlighten my handicapped?

BETTY.

NEITHER is correct, unless the woman needs assistance as when crossing a crowded street and then the man offers her his arm. It is extremely bad form for a man to take a woman's arm—this should never be done. For ease and walking, it is best for a girl and a man to walk independently. The "dragging" era is over, so far as good manners in public are concerned.

2. Your handwriting has an excellent basic quality, and though it is somewhat immature now, this good quality at the foundation will strengthen and become more interesting. It is delightfully legible and clear. Be careful of your letter-spacing—don't crowd one page and waste nothing on the next. Leave even margins on all four sides of your pages. And do not abbreviate on your envelope and in the heading of your letter.

One Bridesmaid

DEAR MRS. BECKMAN:
I intend to be married some time during the coming fall and I plan to be married in church. I have a number of friends whom I would like to have attend me, but as I want to have a very plain wedding, I do not care to have a large number of attendants. I have one sister whom I will have as my maid of honor, and my fiance has one sister whom I would like to have as a bridesmaid. I know that the usual custom is at least three attendants: maid of honor and two bridesmaids. However, I am trying to avoid hurting anyone's feelings, and so I am wondering if it would be proper for me to have just two attendants. I thought perhaps each one could walk down the aisle alone.

E.

ALTHOUGH it is true that usually the bride-to-be plans to have an even number of bridesmaids so that they can walk together in the procession and recessional, it would be perfectly correct for you to have the maid of honor and only one bridesmaid. I like your idea of having them walk alone down the aisle, since this emphasizes the difference between the "honor" attendant and the bridesmaid.

(Mrs. Beckman will be glad to answer questions on etiquette submitted by readers.)

HEALTH'S GLOW FAR OUTSHINES COSMETICS

It's Laudable That Every Woman Should Strive to Look Her Best, Says Authority, But Why Not Win Nature's Coloring Through Health?

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.
United States Senator from New York.
Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

IT was stated at a convention a while ago that considerably more than two billion dollars is spent annually for powder, cold cream, perfumes, lipsticks and other aids to beauty and personal attraction. If it is true, it represents a sum of money equal to that spent for automobiles. It is more than a quarter of the entire proceeds from the farms of America. It would pay the National debt in a few years.

DR. COPELAND.

Eighteen million boxes of rouge and seven million dollars' worth of hair dye were purchased by our wives and sweethearts. All this material was used to camouflage youth and health.

It is a perfectly laudable ambition for a woman to look her best. She isn't to be blamed for this. On the contrary, she is to be commended for her decent sense of self-respect.

I have no objection to cosmetics as such. Most of them are perfectly harmless things. Of course, there are certain hair dyes which are not safe to use. But most creams, powders and rouges are compounded of simple and harmless ingredients.

The objection I have to cosmetics is that they are too commonly applied as a substitute for the color and clearness of the skin that health guarantees. Too often they are used to cover up defects which the regular use of soap and water would remove.

Every girl wants red lips, pink cheeks, good teeth, firm muscles, sparkling eyes, hair of lustre, and a skin which is sweet to smell and pleasant to touch. She wants them as a girl and as she grows older. She never gets over wanting them. When she gets past middle life she weeps if she does not retain them.

The chemists and beauty experts have done wonders. They have placed at the disposal of the fair sex boxes and tubes, jars and bottles, all the paraphernalia to maintain youth and vigor. So much for that.

Simple and well-chosen food, plenty of water to drink and for bathing, sunlight and fresh air, exercise and regular habits—these are the things which will cut down the cosmetic bill. There is no color like the color of red blood showing through the transparent skin of perfect health. This color comes from no pot or tube. It is the result of the chemistry of Nature, more perfect than the product of any human chemist, no matter how clever he may be.

But if I were a girl and didn't know what Nature is willing to give, I would contribute my share to the cosmetic industries. And the last thing I'd stress their dear hearts—they will buy them anyhow.

DOCTOR SNOOK CALM WHILE ON WITNESS STAND

Defendant in Murder Case Tells of Companionate Marriage Confabs With Miss Hix.

Girl Needed Money and Boy Friend Had Gone—Wife and Mother Testify for Prisoner.

COLUMBUS, O., Aug. 7.—Dr. James H. Snook today told the jury in his first degree murder trial the story of his three-year love affair with Theora Hix, the medic co-ed he killed last June 13. It was a story that detailed their meeting in June, 1926, a ripening friendship that grew to intimacy and ended on a lonely rifle range near the edge of the city where the girl's body, battered and slashed, was found the day after she went there for her last tryst with the 49-year-old former Ohio State professor.

Dr. Snook was as calm a witness as has occupied the chair in the trial.

He went to the witness chair after his wife, Mrs. Helen M. Snook, and his 67-year-old mother, Mrs. Abner Snook, had faced the sea of faces in the crowded court room to tell their belief that in the last few years Dr. Snook had changed.

Both women kissed him before they took the stand and his wife remained at the defense table until he started to testify.

"Changed," Women Say

The wife who refused to desert him after he was arrested for the killing of "the other woman" testified that she had no knowledge of the affair between her husband and the girl.

She was the first to testify and stayed until the aged mother remained in the chair. When her husband took up his story, however, she left the room and was not present to hear his detailed account of his friendship with Miss Hix.

Both the wife and mother testified that recently Dr. Snook had displayed a mental unrest that had been in contrast to the calm and placid disposition that had been his before.

Accused Man Calm

Lomax Seyfert of defense counsel then took up the examination of Dr. Snook.

Dr. Snook related his early life and education. He talked in an even, composed voice, and was as cool a witness as has been in the chair. There was not one trace of excitement as he answered clearly and distinctly the preliminary questions of his attorney.

Seyfert took the questioning through Dr. Snook's study at Ohio State, his entrance into the veterinary faculty there, his war service in an aviation ground school and his trip to Europe in 1920 as a member of the American Olympic pistol team. Dr. Snook said he had held "six or eight" national pistol championships in slow and rapid fire and "four or five" in rifle shooting.

Companionship Recited

"When was the first time you ever met Miss Theora Hix?" Seyfert asked.

"About three years ago. She came to the veterinary department as a stenographer.

"I frequently had conversations with her at certain times of the day when I had to go to her office to have some stenographic work done. She said she did not have enough money for her schoolwork and consequently was forced to accept employment part of the time.

"In general our conversation was discussion of her affairs. She spoke of being left alone then during the summer of 1926. Most of the students had gone away and she mentioned that her 'boy friend' had gone also. She did not speak much about her 'boy friend' at that time. (Later Dr. Snook learned that the friend was Marion T. Myers, who was employed in the horticultural department at the university.)

"During the first two weeks of our acquaintance we talked about companionate marriages. She said she thought companionate marriage was all right 'but when you lost your companion, it wasn't.'

"This remark led us to discuss books of that nature."

Her: "Really, I like you. I'd like to see more of you."

A day later he got an invitation to a swimming party.

SHERIFF CALLED TO STOP SLAYER, BUT TIP IS INCORRECT

A peaceful night's slumber was interrupted for Sheriff V. T. Jackson last night when he was called to stop a car answering the description of the one driven by a man wanted for murder in Idaho.

And it turned out to be the right car—almost.

The only difficulty was that it was another type of the same make of car wanted and the man driving it had done nothing out of the ordinary.

Health Bulletin

Suggestions for Automobile Tourists.

By Oregon State Board of Health.

To speak of disease when planning a touring vacation, the United States Public Health Service points out, may seem tactless; but we all know the danger to health from impure water. Many tourists camps are so located that they may have water from a public supply, and is fortunate. Others must develop their own supplies from such sources as wells and springs. In doing this, there arises the possibility of unsafe water unless the development work is done in accord with accepted sanitary principles. If the tourist camp has been inspected by a governmental agency and approved or certified, the safety of the water supply can be assumed; but if it has not, we should know the outward signs of a properly developed supply for which to look.

Open springs are generally unsafe, because they are so readily accessible to contaminating influences. If the spring is not properly protected, surface water carrying off the washings from the ground can very easily run into the spring. The best type of small water supply is a driven or drilled well, which is cased from the top of the ground or the water-bearing strata, or at least to the first layer of solid rock. To the top of the casing the pump may be attached; and about the casing and under the pump there may be built a watertight sloping platform. If, in your travels, you are not sure of the quality of the drinking water, boil it before using. After boiling, it will probably have a flat taste. This may be remedied by pouring the water from one vessel into another a number of times, which procedure permits the water to aerate itself.

Of all the camp facilities, the tourist will probably appreciate nothing more than a clean, safe, and sanitary method of sewage disposal. Flush toilets connected to a sewage system of a city provide the best arrangement of all; but, if this is impossible, they may with satisfaction be connected to a septic tank. Chemical closets are acceptable if given the necessary care and attention.

A well-planned tourist camp will have suitable containers for receiving garbage; attendant service for removing and cleaning the garbage cans; and the necessary means for its ultimate disposal, such as an incinerator or nearby burial ground. Careful attention should be given to the source of the milk supply, particularly if there are children in the party. A swimming place should be selected with care also, in order to avoid the use of rivers carrying sewage from communities located upstream from the camp.

Educational measures are the only means of reaching the hundreds of thousands or millions, rather, who annually start out on a trip in their own cars. Health officials are endeavoring to help the tourists keep themselves free from sickness, thereby making possible the fullest enjoyment of a trip of this kind.
