GLENDALE NEWS NOTES

(News-Review Douglas County Special)
GLENDALE, Aug. 9.—Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Bellotti left here Wednesday for Salem, where they will attend the state convention of the American Legion and Auxiliary. The Bellottis expected to visit Dr. and Mrs. G. C. Knott at Independence en route. Mr. Bellotti intends to transact business at Portland one day before returning here.
Mr. and Mrs. A. M. McFarlane were hosts Monday to Mr. and Mrs. A. Creve and Mrs. M. Patterson of San Francisco, who stopped here for a brief visit on their way to Canadian points for a vacation trip. Mrs. Patterson is private secretary to the cashier of the Bank of Italy at San Francisco and Mr. Creve is manager of the San Mateo Burlington Polo club.
Mr. and Mrs. Gail Landers and Mr. and Mrs. Roy Tweedle of Woodburn arrived here Tuesday evening from Klamath Falls for a brief visit at the L. C. Normoyle home. The party was on a vacation trip. Mrs. Landers was formerly Miss Pearl Harding and is a sister of Mrs. Normoyle.
Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Brown of this city, together with their son, daughter-in-law and grandson, Mr. and Mrs. William C. Brown and Kenneth Brown of Ashland, motored to Hiddell last Sunday. They attended a family reunion and picnic held at Cedar Grove. J. R. Gilman of Cow Creek, together with his son Hilary Gilman and his family, also of Cow Creek, and his son, Shirley Gilman of Glendale, were also in attendance from this part of the county. Mr. Everett L. Jones, and her two children, who are visiting here from Storm Lake, Iowa. Some of the others in attendance at this family reunion are Mr. and Mrs. Sam Hall of Riddle, Mr. and Mrs. John Chapman of Roseburg, Mr. and Mrs. Dick Chapman and Mr. and Mrs. Richard Cannon of Deer Creek. Mr. Cannon was the spryest man there, despite his eighty-one years, and is still one of the best old time violinists in this part of the state. About 75 were in attendance, consisting mostly of the children and grandchildren with their families, of the older people mentioned, and in turn are all related, either directly or by marriage. The affair was such a success that those present decided to hold another reunion next summer with possibly Canyon camp at Canyonville as the meeting place.

R. M. Eberle returned here Saturday evening from a vacation trip to various California cities, including Mendocino, where he is a son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Ira Lewis, reside and Ukiah, where another son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Allen Brown, are located. Eberle resumed his duties at the Goodrich and Smith store Monday.
Dr. and Mrs. A. J. Fawcett left here Sunday for Astoria, where Mrs. Fawcett underwent an operation Monday. She is getting along nicely and will probably be able to return home next Sunday. Dr. Fawcett returned here Monday evening.
C. C. Hobson, an employee of Lyall-Lambson Lumber Co., while driving to work Monday morning failed to negotiate the curve on the Cow creek road, opposite Chas. Pike's field, skidded the car around, went through a fence and stopped with the car turned over. A broken wheel and some dents were the extent of the damage to the car. Hobson was uninjured.
Charles Walker narrowly escaped being killed by a rockslide and probably better killed last Saturday afternoon while working near Tunnel 7. Walker was employed by the Southern Pacific railroad and was engaged in removing rock debris from the foot of a rock face when a large rock slide came down without any warning. Walker's quickness and agility saved him, but he decided to quit then and there that he had had enough railroad work. He is now going to farm a ranch he owns on Cow creek, after having been in the railroad service for seven years.

The mayor and city council met last Monday evening. The council ordered a partial withdrawal of fire restrictions pertaining to the portion of block 1, facing Pacific avenue, so as to permit the building of residences of common wood construction in this block. Building for business purposes are still restricted to fire proof construction. Fencing and oiling the city streets was again discussed, but no action was taken.
The prompt arrival of help and the speedy action of a volunteer bucket brigade saved the residence of Mrs. Preston Jackson, located a short distance from here on the Cow creek road, from destruction by fire Tuesday forenoon. Mrs. E. D. Gilman, who is visiting here, discovered the room in flames and immediately gave alarm. Help was summoned by telephone. Neighbors and a part of the Glendale Lumber Co. crew arrived quickly and soon had the flames under control. A large hole was burned in the roof and aside from water and smoke the remainder of the house was not damaged. The damage was partially covered by an insurance. The families of Edwin Johnson and Ernest Blatty reside in the house.

Mrs. I. H. Smith motored to Roseburg Saturday to do some shopping. On her return she was accompanied by her daughter, Miss Ethel M. Smith, who spent Sunday here with her parents.
Alameda and Zerk grease fittings for all types of farm machines are sold at Wharton Bros.

CHAPTER XXIX.

"What do you want to know?" cried the girl. "I've told you everything."

"Sit down!"
"But I've told you everything!"
"Sit down!"

The girl obeyed, watching Marx warily.
"Now!" Marx rubbed his hands for her face a delicate third degree. "Let me tell you now, you lied. Then you can tell us the truth. To begin with, you didn't come back here the night Sewell was murdered. You came the next day. That was a fake faint you pulled. 'Sewell was here with Major Preston. He sneaked out to see you at the club and then sneaked back again. We know all that. What we want to know is why you deliberately lied to us."

"I had my reasons." The girl looked away.
"Oh, so you admit you lied!" Marx gloated.

"Yes."
"Why?"
"I won't tell you."

"Then what did you do that night?"
"I stayed in my hotel."

"And the next day?"
"I went up here."

"Why?"
"I won't tell you!"

"There's lots of time hanging heavy in the Tomb," said Marx. "Now I'd like to send a pretty girl down to a cold, dry place like the Tomb, but if you force me to, why I guess I'll have to."

"One moment," begged the doctor, "perhaps I can help Mrs. Edison out. You had some understanding with Sewell, didn't you?"

The girl looked away.
"An understanding that night. You and Sewell planned something."

The girl didn't answer.
"And your plans didn't come off," said the doctor.

Still the girl said nothing.
"And even now, you don't understand why your plans didn't come off," concluded the doctor. "Something puzzles you. My dear young lady, you have learned already that it doesn't pay to fool the police. Let me advise you to let us have the truth. Come! Sewell left you at the hotel that night, if I recall, and came on here. Your husband followed him. Now, before he left you, what did Sewell say to you?"

The girl seemed to struggle. She looked at Marx, and then at the doctor, and then her head sank into her hands.

"Oh, I might as well tell you," she cried at last. "But, for God's sake keep it out of the papers."
"Not a word," the doctor quickly promised.

"I guess it's no secret the way I felt about Sewell," Mrs. Edison smiled somewhat bitterly. "I guess I was a fool. But we did have an understanding. We were going away to Europe together. We'd decided that coming back in the fall. At least I decided it, and he agreed."

"At once?" interrupted the doctor.
"No," the girl said after a pause. "But I threatened to kill myself if he didn't. I was sick of it. I wanted to get away where we could be together. He said his business wouldn't let him, but that night he agreed. There was a boat sailing the next day at noon. We were to take that."

"Now, exactly what did Sewell say to you? Where would he meet you and when?"

"We were to meet the next morning at nine. He was going to call for me at my hotel."

"And he didn't?"
"He was murdered that night!"
"But you know nothing of his death while you waited for him to come?"

"No!"
"Didn't see the newspapers by any chance, did you?"

"So what did you decide to do?"
"I thought it better come here. It was the only thing I could do. I thought he had changed his mind again."

"Now tell us exactly what you did, how you got here and why you acted as you did."

The girl paused and then seemed to study the floor. Finally she spoke.

"I'd had a dream that night."

"A dream?"
"Yes. I'd dreamt Sewell was murdered."

Marx sniffed. But the doctor's face was solemn.
"And, of course, when I woke up I thought it was nerves. But then I got here, and I saw the police, and some one said he'd been murdered. Then I almost went crazy."

"Yes?"
"I just didn't know what to do. Finally I remembered you could get into the apartment through the adjoining house, and so, somehow, I got in that way. And then there were people in the apartment, and I just lay in the alcove until I couldn't stand it any more, and then I came out. And—and—"

"The girl seemed to sigh in relief—that's all there is to it."

"Remarkable!" said the doctor. "I've heard better," said Marx. "Don't you believe me?" the girl cried indignantly.

"No," said Marx. "I guess you need a little prompting. In the first place we know all about the diamond. See?"

"The diamond?"
"Yes, the diamond, and never mind looking so innocent about it. Sewell told you about the Russian diamond, didn't he?"

The girl looked at Marx, then at the doctor, and then her gaze went to the ceiling.

"No."
"Look here," barked Marx. "I'm not going to stand much more of this. We know when you're lying and when you're telling the truth, and let me tell you that you haven't begun to tell the truth yet. Get that!"

The girl sprang from her chair. "Sit down!"
"You can't talk to me like that," she cried.

"Sit down!"
As if realizing the futility of her struggle, she seated herself once more, bit her lips, and then surveyed her tormentors with hard blue eyes.

"Well," she snapped, "what do you want?"

"Mrs. Edison," began the doctor, "we have reason to believe that you have not told us your exact arrangement with Sewell. I don't wish to appear as threatening as my friend, Inspector Marx, but let me assure you that unless you do show some signs of good faith with us, we'll be compelled to take very harsh measures."

"Do you think I killed him?" she demanded suddenly.

"That's a rhetorical question," said the doctor, "and shall remain unanswered."

"I don't know any more than I've told you."

"Mrs. Edison, you would have us believe that you came to this apartment, knowing that Sewell was murdered, knowing that the police were here, because—you wanted to see him. Now what was the real reason?"

"I told you I was half crazy."

"But you weren't crazy enough to come to the apartment in the usual fashion. You chose the secret passage from the next house. Am I to believe that when you go insane you still retain all your native caution?"

The girl shook her head dolefully.

"Mrs. Edison, isn't it true that you came back here to get hold of that diamond?"

"Yes," she said finally, after a struggle.

"No," contradicted the doctor, smiling. "You didn't come back for the diamond. You came to this apartment under orders."

The girl shrank back and looked at the doctor with frightened eyes. "You obeyed those orders?"

The doctor stood before her, a figure of accusation.

"Who gave you those orders?" the doctor demanded quickly.

"The girl had gone pale."

"You know everything," she mumbled. "You can tell me that."

"Very well, I shall."

The girl held on to the chair. The doctor waited. The girl seemed to grow rigid in her chair. "I'll give you one more chance—who gave you those orders?"

"All right," the girl broke the silence. "But I have your promise fresh again. The doctor sat solemnly that notice will happen to me."

Marx nodded.
"I want it in writing."

"All right," said Marx, and tore a page from his notebook. "How's this: 'In return for valuable information which Mrs. Edison promises to divulge to the police, I guarantee her complete immunity in the Sewell murder.'—he paused—'unless she herself committed the crime.'"

"I don't think we need that proviso," intervened the doctor. "but I don't think Mrs. Edison will object to it."

She shook her head.

"All right," said Marx, handling her the note. "We don't usually do this, but then this isn't a usual case."

The girl took the note, read it carefully and placed it in her purse.

"Very well," she said. "I'll tell you everything. I have lied to you. The night that Sewell met my husband and myself at the night club Sewell had agreed, just as I said, to go with me to Europe. He was going to stand much more of this. We know when you're lying and when you're telling the truth, and let me tell you that you haven't begun to tell the truth yet. Get that!"

"As we were coming back in the taxi, Sewell said he had a strange feeling of his life. He told me something of a Russian agent who knew of the stone, and who would kill if he knew he had it."
