GOOD-NIGHT STORIES

The Shadow-Children Visit With "The Gleaners" of a Famous Old Painting.

"Now where do you suppose Knarf can be?" said Hanid, addressing Mij, Flor and Yam, one evening.

The little shadow-children with the turned-about names shrugged their shoulders.

"We don't know," they replied. It didn't please Hanid in the least to learn this, for she knew that when Knarf was missing it was a sure sign he was up to mischief.

She set out with the others, therefore, to search for him. As they passed through the library, they heard a familiar voice calling them. It was Knarf's.

"Where are you?" they called back.

"Here!" he replied. Though they looked behind the legs of the table, and between the books on the shelves and in every other place the picture, but actually inside the picture.

"How did you get in there?" the others exclaimed.

"I just jumped in," he replied. "You can do the same." They glanced curiously at the picture. The name of it was "The Gleaners" and it was painted by an artist named Millet. In the front were three French peasant women in a field of grain, the stalks of which had just been reaped and removed. They were all bending over, as though seeking something in the rows. In the background were two tall oat-stalks near which were standing a wagon and horses. Farther back, men could be seen reaping the oats, and at the extreme right was a man on horseback. Knarf was standing next to one of the three peasant women.

"Just jump in!" Knarf urged. Being curious to see how it felt to be inside a picture, they did as he advised and instantly found themselves standing alongside of him. It was as though they were suddenly out in the country. They heard the creaks and the birds and, from the distance, the sound of the sickles cutting the oats.

Hanid nodded to the three peasant women. As their heads were bent to the ground, they didn't notice her, as she approached them.

"Good evening," she said. "What are you doing?"

"They didn't look up as they replied: 'We're gleaning.'"

"Gleaning—what is that?" Yam wanted to know.

"We're gathering up the few grains of oats that the reapers have left behind. That's what gleaners mean." The shadow-children observed that each woman had a handful of stalks.

"During the winter," one of the women explained, "every grain is needed, so we leave nothing behind on the ground."

"But it is hard work bending over and picking up the fallen grains," said the second.

"Did you want us to help you?" said Mij.

The three women shook their heads. "No, it wouldn't do a bit of good. We have to stay in the same position anyway. The artist painted us just as he painted us. This is a very famous picture. It wouldn't do for us to change ourselves. It might spoil everything."

And the shadow-children felt very sorry for the three old peasant women who had to remain bent over the ground, gleaners just because the artist painted them that way.

"Just Jump In!" Knarf Urged. They could think of, they could find no trace of him. All the while they heard his mocking voice crying: "Here! Why don't you look here?"

Listening very carefully, they finally traced his voice to a picture hanging over the bookcase.

"He must be behind the frame," said Yam, springing onto the bookcase. The others followed. But when they looked they found nothing.

"Ha-ha! Here I am!" chuckled Knarf, so close to them they started in surprise. Then they saw to their astonishment that he was not behind the picture, nor in front of

SAN FRANCISCO AT TOP ONCE MORE BY ONLY HALF GAME

(By the Associated Press.)

The sea-saw battle for the Pacific coast league leadership continued with unabated fury yesterday.

It was the Seals' turn to win, and win they did. The day before, the day before, the Hollywood Stars trimmed the home boys and took the lead by half a game, while the day before that the Seals had won the lead away from the boys from movie land.

Not once in the last week has any team held the lead by more than half a game, and competition throughout the league has been of the keenest.

The home team scored 14 to 7 against the visitors at Recreation park. The Seals made 22 hits off Shellenbach, and Harvey, Loris Baker, of Salem, Ore., started the Seals off on the right track in the first inning when he flogged out a homer to score with one ahead of him.

Ed Hoecht, prize pitcher of the Angels, fooled the Mission sluggers, while mates pounded the combined offerings of Herman Phillette and Caster for an easy 8 to 2 victory at Los Angeles, and put them back into a tie with the Reds for third place.

A wild throw by Silva, Oakland shortstop, paved the way for a 10 to 9 Sacramento victory over Oakland in the capital city.

The Ducks made it four straight over Seattle by winning from the Redskins, 11 to 2. Five runs in the first inning clinched the contest for Portland, but two more were added in the fourth, again in the fifth and sixth. Chesterfield pitched for the Ducks, holding the home team on an 8-hit diet while his mates pounded Blevins, Lamanek and Sahlgren for 19.

OVERBECK AND COOKE SETTLEMENT ARRANGED

(Associated Press Local Wire)

PORTLAND, Aug. 16.—Creditors of the bankrupt brokerage house of Overbeck & Cooke today had expectations of receiving twenty cents on the dollar. A. M. Cannon, referee in bankruptcy, authorized J. G. Gillingham, trustee, to sign on behalf of the creditors a release under which Logan & Bryan, New York brokers, will pay the estate $250,000.

While disclaiming legal liability or any knowledge of the manipulations which wrecked the Portland firm, Logan & Bryan agreed to pay the sum, together with $25,000 they acknowledged owing, on condition the creditors release all claim against them.

About 95 per cent of the creditors, whose claims aggregate $1,730,193.70, signed the release.
