TIME files and takes with it memories of many lovely affairs—bringing promise of many equally delightful affairs to be.

The breath of autumn is in the air although the warm summer days are still with us. The season, however, is changing and with it comes the quiet season with society enjoying an interval of lessened activity. The cool air of the morning hours is noticeable and predicts the coming of autumn.

Autumn—the ideal season for the hostess, is fast approaching and in the quiet period between the seasons social groups are planning for delightful events.

Vacationists will soon be at home after trips here and you. Out of town visitors will shortly be finding the "good home" and life will settle into its regular routine.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. M. Brown Honored at Housewarming

A few neighbors and friends of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. M. Brown and family surprised them Thursday evening at their beautiful new summer home in West Roseburg. Twenty-five friends gathered for a social evening in the form of a housewarming.

Black Leads All In Trim Street Frocks For Autumn

When in doubt wear black, is the advice of Miriam Seeger, and if it is for afternoon wear by all means make it soft Elizabeth crepe. The draped skirt and circular cape as shown lend graceful and elegant lines to the wearer, and a smart black felt hat strikes a note of individuality by adding two beige buttons under each ear. Jean Arthur applauds the return of black for the fall season and adds a vivid touch of color with the golden leaf designs on her frock of black satin shown above. The ever chic beige and brown combination is used by Olga Baclanova for a trim street costume. The jumper adheres to beige with brown bands as accents, while the finely plated skirt is entirely of brown. Hat, bag and shoes harmonize. Gwen Lee has chosen purple tweed in the street costume pictured and the blouse shows the new double-breasted style finished with leather buttons and showing a belt of the material tied on one side.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 24—(A. P.)—The craze for Latin-American dishes is sweeping Washington and spreading to all parts of the country. Fashionable dinner parties start with cubes of alligator pear served at no expense and wind up with queso y dulce—fruit paste and cheese.

Following the example of Alfonso Pozet, former ambassador from Peru, it has become the smart set for a host himself to concoct some tasty Latin-American dish.

Women In Washington

Alfonso Pozet, while in this country, was national fable in his speciality dishes which he served at his dinner parties. Many of these dishes are now on the menus of leading hotels in Washington, New York and other cities.

Women In Washington

Ambassador Pozet and his wife were among the most popular couples who ever have been in Washington. Their dinner parties were something to dream about in advance and to remember months afterward.

Women In Washington

Soon after the guests assembled for the reception, a man in white coat and cap, who connected a South American dish which fairly waded the guests' mouths with its savory aroma. When dinner was served the ambassador slipped into the role of host and appeared at the head of the table in faultless evening attire to listen with pleased expression while the guests raved over his wonderful cooking.

Women In Washington

Most of the Latin American diplomats in Washington have their own special blend of coffee sent them from South America. Some have their own coffee plantations. Instead of a quick boil or percolator method they reduce the coffee to a thick syrup, then stir it into hot milk. The result is said by connoisseurs to be the last word in coffee making.

Women In Washington

Chefs of restaurants from Latin America are now teaching the chefs of fashionable Washingtonians this coffee making method as well as the proper way to make the delectable fruit paste.

Women In Washington

The alligator pear, once served chilled or as a salad, has now "gone native" and appears in soup because any Latin American will tell you that eating certain foods destroys the aroma and flavor while heat brings them out.

Women In Washington

Arroz Valencia is a favorite dish of Dr. L. S. Rowe, director of the Pan-American Union, whose wonderful luncheon parties served in his white house with the blue doors have achieved a great reputation in Washington. It is a combination of meat, rice and other ingredients.

Women In Washington

The cook book issued by the Congressional Club, composed of women in official life, contains new recipes from Latin-American lands than from any other part of the world.

To tell the crocus from the crow. The reason why is just because they are not versed in Nature's laws. The noisy, cawing crows all come, Obeying to the cro' custom. A large crowd caw-caw to convoke. You never hear a crocus croak!"

Another bit of help for the vegetable gardener—how to distinguish between the parrot and the carrot: "The parrot and the carrot. We may easily confound. They are very much alike in looks and similar in sound. One can tell the parrot. By his clear articulation. But carrots are unable. To engage in conversation."

Women In Washington

This handy manual is certainly invaluable to students of floriculture and I am surprised that the library board has overlooked it.

Women In Washington

We can have green lawns and shrubbery and some flowers all winter and with half the expense that the same things would be in most other parts of the country. Any afternoon one can drive out from Roseburg to where azaleas, rhododendrons, manzanitas and huckleberries can be had for the picking. Huckleberry bushes are among the most beautiful of the evergreen shrubs and branches of them are shipped back east for the use of florists in crowded lots. All these things should be planted more not only for our own enjoyment but because they are a demonstration to strangers passing through in the winter of the mildness of our climate. When they come from the frozen parts of the country and find everything green here it makes an impression that they never forget. That impression is worth dollars and cents to Douglas county for some of these strangers will be coming back here to live some day.

Women In Washington

Several large loads of rhododendrons were sold in Roseburg this spring and summer besides those that were brought from the coast by the owners of the gardens themselves. It is ticklish business digging any evergreen. The roots must not be exposed to the air and a good-sized ball of earth has to be taken up with the plant and bound up tightly with burlap. When planting out plant burlap and all without disturbing the ball and give lots of water. Rhododendrons want an acid soil like leaf mould, and are helped by an application of aluminum sulphate. They do not want to be cultivated and appreciate a mulch of some kind. Some use sawdust, others peat moss or lawn clippings.

Epworth League Enjoys Delightful Evening

The Epworth League of the First Methodist Episcopal church and their guests enjoyed a delightful affair Thursday evening at the Country club.

Epworth League Enjoys Delightful Evening

Swimming was the diversion of the early evening after which the winners were toasted. The singing of popular songs around a huge bonfire concluded the affair.

Poets' Corner

OUR BABY CLINICS
The doors into our clinic rooms. Wide to receive our babies there. Though they be made of wood or stone. Air truly portals very fair.
Within await the services Of well-skilled minds, of tender hands. To help the mothers guide each child. As God for them through nature plans.
To stay the enemy that lurks. To banish practices correct. To bring to light the hidden ills. That untrained eyes cannot detect.
For future health and happiness. Foundations firm and sound is laid. That study through the years may be. Applied to serve in nature's way.
No wealth in houses or in land. Can ever compare with bodies sound. Their silver and of gold are found. And when these doors are opened wide. That light of health through them may shine. It seems that it could be but I. Originated their design.
—Ethel Fayne Jones
