Auction Sale

Saturday, Sept. 7th

All bids must be in our office on or before the above date. Make a thorough investigation of the property and make us an offer. 10% deposit must accompany all bids.

160 acres of fir timber land in Douglas county, Oregon, about 11 miles up North Myrtle Creek from the town of Myrtle Creek which is on the main line of the Southern Pacific railroad.

S. E. ¼ of N. W. ¼, N. E. ¼ of S. W. ¼, W. ½ of S. E. ¼, all in section 20, township 28, range 4 west, Douglas County, Oregon. About 11 acres suitable for cultivation if timber is removed, balance suitable only for grazing land after timber is removed. The county's cruise is 3,345,000 feet of fir with some cedar. Adjoining 440 acres may also be purchased making a dandy site for a small mill.

Here is a rare opportunity to purchase an investment of this kind at your own price and terms. The owner lives considerable distance from the property and is anxious to dispose of the same and has authorized us to sell this fine timber land to the highest approved bidder. Investigate it at once and mail your offer.

GOOD-NIGHT STORIES

By Max Trell

KNARF TRIES TO SKATE ON THE WATER—WITH DISASTROUS RESULTS.

One afternoon as Mij, Flor, Hanid, Yam and Knarf—the five little shadow-children with the names spelled backwards—were strolling along the margin of the pond, they heard the sound of many voices. It was as though a picnic were taking place nearby. They stopped still to listen.

"O-oh, isn't the skating fine!" said one voice.

"It's the best skating we've had in weeks!" replied another. "Then a loud shout went up. "Hooray, there's nothing like skating!"

"Isn't the Skating Fine?"

Now this was exceedingly curious, for it was mid-summer when ice-skating is out of the question. Yet the voices clearly came from the pond. It couldn't, of course, be roller-skating. No one can roller skate on a pond. So the shadow-children didn't know what to make of it, until Knarf, who had run somewhat ahead and was busily peering under the overhanging rocks cried: "Here they are!"

"Who—?" exclaimed the others, greatly excited.

"The skaters!"

They hastened over to the end of one of the overhanging rocks, where Knarf was lying flat on his stomach and pointing down to the water.

"There they are!" he said.

An odd sight met their eyes. About two dozen little black specks were zigzagging up and down on the surface of the water around the rock. They moved in quick flashes, getting out of each other's way in the most extraordinary fashion.

"Why," Yam said in astonishment, "they do really look as though they were skating!"

"Hello," Mij called down to them, "are you really skating?"

The little specks halted abruptly, and the shadows observed that they were little black bugs, about half the size of a pea. They gazed up at them.

"Of course we're skating," said one.

"We're water-skaters!" announced another.

"All water-skaters skate!" said a third.

"This is our skating-pond," said a fourth.

It didn't leave the shadows any less astonished to learn that they were water-skaters and that they all skated. What they didn't understand was sow they could possibly do it, for the water appeared no difference from usual. It wasn't as though they were floating on it. That would have been perfectly understandable. It was their standing up on it on all their feet that was astonishing.

"How do you manage to do it?" Hanid wanted to know.

The water-skaters chuckled. "It's the easiest thing in the world. All you have to do is keep your feet from breaking through the surface of the water. Anybody can do it!"

"Can I?" Knarf demanded, suddenly becoming interested in the idea.

"Certainly you can! Just step down lightly on the water. Then shuffle your feet from side to side and you'll skate off at once."

At these words, the little shadow-boy started to let himself down the rock.

"Come back!" cried the others in alarm. "You can't skate on the water! You're not a water-skater!"

The shadow-boy paid no heed to them, but with a spring landed feet-first on the surface. He shuffled with all his might. In vain! Down he went, down into the water! The splash that he caused frightened the water-skaters and they whizzed off like a flash.

"You must have stepped on a hole in the water," Yam remarked, as they pulled the disappointed shadow-boy out of the pond.
