ROSEBURG, OREGON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1929.

DR. FRANK MATTHEWS IS LEAVING

A LEADER in public affairs here, the head of an aggressive service club organization and the pastor of a large church, Dr. Frank Matthews' leaving will mean a serious loss to this community. Dr. Matthews has established an enviable reputation for success in leading churches in college towns. That is why Corvallis called him. Until that city becomes acquainted with Dr. Matthews, Corvallis will not realize how fortunate it is. Cities large and small are made up of individuals and upon the energy, wisdom and enthusiasm of the individuals depends the success and happiness of the city itself. That is why we will miss Frank Matthews here. Frank is one of those unstoppable fighters for things that are right and good. He does his boasting and fighting because he knows that part of the happiness in life comes from the personal pride and enthusiasm for the community in which we live.

He is a whole-souled, hard-hitting, broadminded man. He is a leader for things that are right and constructive and will be wherever he goes. Corvallis is fortunate. Dr. Matthews' successor here has not been named as yet, but he will have a big job indeed to fill the place that will be left vacant here by Dr. Matthews.

NEXT YEAR'S BALLOT MEASURES

IN THE LIST of amendments and measures to be placed before the voters of Oregon in November, 1930, as issued by the secretary of state, three appear to be of outstanding importance. These are the amendment for establishment a cabinet form of state government and the two amendments to license automobiles according to their depreciation value. The amendment first named provides for a far-reaching re-organization of our state government. The other two propose a fundamental change in the present method of taxing automobiles which would have an equally important effect upon highway revenues.

Others measures upon which the voters will pass judgment are the income tax bill passed by the last legislature and upon which the referendum was invoked; a measure local to Multnomah county providing for two additional judges of the circuit court there; an amendment to fix the pay of members of the legislature at $500 for each two-year term, an amendment to extend the bonus loan privilege to veterans of the war of the Philippines and Chinese boxer rebellion and to veterans who did not serve from Oregon, but who have lived here for ten years past; and an amendment for repeal of state liability for payment of interest on irrigation and drainage district bonds.

It is not likely that much campaigning will be done for or against any of these measures until next summer. The list is issued at this time in conformity with a requirement of law. Later on there will be a good deal of tumult and shouting over some of them.

POEM FOR THE DAY

By LOUIS ALBERT BANKS

THE CHANGING MINISTRIES OF THE YEARS

"With the ministry in mind, as the start of a career Julius P. Seebach, Jr., program manager for the Columbia Broadcasting Company, has come to the point where he feels that he is ministering to public needs when presenting good programs on the Columbia chain. Mr. Seebach is the son of Julius Seebach, pastor of the Lutheran Memorial Church in Philadelphia, Pa. His mother, who is the author of ten or twelve books, is also editor of the magazine put out by the Women's Home Foreign Missionary Society. While attending Bucknell College in his junior year the war broke out and young Seebach joined the ambulance service, giving two years' work in the French Army and winning a Croix de Guerre. While doing this work he assisted in the French religious service, adding the French Protestant ministers in their work. After the war ceased, Mr. Seebach came to New York and sang hymns and concert, in the meantime studying with Frank La Forge. Through an audition at Station WOR, he secured a position as an announcer at that station, where he remained two years, being also an assistant program manager. He joined the Columbia Broadcasting System in January, 1925, as production manager."

Mr. Seebach now feels that he has found his place as a real minister of Jesus to men.

This story wakes my preacher dreams
And stirs my thought to hopeful streams.
How far from circuit riding days
To radio broadcasting ways!
The first was suited to its time.
Wrought transformations rare, sublime:
The new keeps step with modern pace,
Can scatter wide the Gospel's grace.

Recalling changes I have seen—
As circuit rider young and green
I rode the circuits far and wide—
I see camp meetings in their pride,
I go to cities great and grand—
With "leave to print" through the land;
See Dobbin change to gasmobile
Till all the world is on the wheel.

And now, I've flown by airplane,
Have proved its swift and wondrous gain,
Have spoken o'er the radio
To multitudes I never knew.
I'm sure this Julius Seebach's right—
That in these days of airship flight
The man who talks o'er ether's wave
Will have the widest chance to save.

For more and more the radio
Will be the way all men will know;
And with each fleeting, passing year
Will be the way they'll look for cheer.
Seebach is wise this plan to choose
For spreading wide the Gospel news,
I trust his ministry of cheer
Will make the careless millions hear.

EDITORIALS ON THE DAY'S NEWS

ROSE.

THE great General Motors Corporation, in its best year, sells almost a little less than 300,000 automobiles. That is a mere drop in the bucket when compared with its sales in the United States.

Why? Anyone can answer that question. Americans, in the mass, are able to afford automobiles. The rest of the world, speaking of people in the mass, is not.

LET us not play the Pharisee. Let us not merely give thanks that we are not as these others, and let it go at that.

We want to sell automobiles to all the world. We want to sell all of our surplus output to the rest of the world. We have unlimited capacity for production. All we need, in order to achieve infinite expansion of our industries, is a market with unlimited capacity to absorb.

So let us hope that the time may come, and come soon, when the rest of the world may be on a level of comfort and plenty somewhat comparable to ours. When that time comes, the market for American products will be infinitely expanded.

Welfare Organizations and National Health

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.

United States Senator from New York.
Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

HOW many are there who think of social work as charity pure and simple? I fear many fail to realize the progress of the times. We overlook too many things that have to do with improving the welfare of the public.

The average person who does not suffer from any particular illness, or who is not in need of any social help, has little knowledge of what is being accomplished in some cities. They never come in contact with the fine work that the welfare organization groups are doing.

The Charity Organization of New York and the Welfare Council of New York City have co-operated together recently in issuing a directory of social agencies in the city. These have to do with better housing conditions, help for the homeless, homes for the aged, legal aid and help for the immigrant, foreign-born and the traveler. In addition, there are protective and correctional agencies.

In New York City alone there are 1,100 social agencies. There are more than 300 organizations engaged in family welfare work. Eighty of these are relief societies. There are 6 organizations for promoting better housing conditions; 23 to help the homeless; 92 homes for the aged; 11 legal-aid services; 50 agencies to assist immigrants, foreign-born and travelers; 10 protective and correctional agencies for adults. In many of the 470 agencies engaged in some form of child welfare, they also carry on health work, family welfare or recreational, as well as educational activities and neighborhood work.

There are 262 hospitals and 1,410 clinics dealing with health problems of the city, besides 112 infant health stations. Also there are 27 nursing services; 67 institutions for convalescents; 146 services for mental hygiene and 36 health administration and educational organizations.

It is interesting to note that, with New York City "the social work capital of the world," there are 183 headquarters for national and international welfare agencies in the city. This great work represents an achievement which is significant of the broad and humane interest of public spirited citizens in the public welfare.

The statistics of the work of these organizations show how much the improvement of the public health is due to their efforts. Without doubt there would be greater demands made upon the doctor and hospital.

Good Manners

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Proper Introductions

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

1. What would be the proper way to introduce a boy to a mixed group of boys and girls?

2. When there are three boys—to a mixed group?

3. A girl and a boy to a mixed group?

4. When introducing a boy to a girl—does it make any difference if I say "Mr. Allen, Miss Johnson," or "Miss Johnson, Mr. Allen?"

JOHN.

If the boy is a very young boy, you would use his first name, and introduce him first to the girls. "Miss Allen, may I present Robert Nash?" or "May Allen, this is Robert Nash," and "Miss Johnson, Robert Nash." Then introduce him to the other boys, "George Underwood, Robert Nash," and "Geoffrey Field, Robert Nash."

2. Make such group of introductions separately. That is, introduce the first boy to the group, then the second boy, and then the third boy. Don't bury in making your introductions, but give to each the full of value that it deserves.

3. Introduce the girl first, in introducing her to the other girls, and then presenting the boys to her. Then introduce the boy, first to the girls and then to the boys.

4. Mention the name of the girl or woman first. "Miss Johnson, may I present Mr. Allen?" or "Miss Johnson, this is Mr. Allen" or "Miss Johnson, Mr. Allen."

were it not for these worthy organizations. Let us do all we can to encourage this fine spirit.

It is to be hoped that other cities of the country enjoy these immeasurable benefits. I assume they do.

cation at a small resort. While there the son of the proprietor did everything possible to make our visit enjoyable. Would it be appropriate to send him a small remembrance to show our appreciation? If so, what would you suggest and how would you word the note accompanying it? We had hardly time to thank him personally, as the train did not stop long enough.

1. S. B. Y. all means write a note of thanks and appreciation to this thoughtful friend, telling him how much his kindness touched you, and how grateful you are for it. He will be delighted to have such a note of thanks. Then, if you wish, you might send him a carton of his favorite cigarettes. If you remember the what kind he preferred, or a well chosen book that you think that he would enjoy. Either of these gifts would be in perfect taste.

A Musical Director's Name
DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:
1. I enjoy reading your column, and read it every day. I have been to you before and so I am here again. Will you please settle an argument? The question is, which is correct, "Paul Whitman" or "Paul Whitman" in it pronounced as "Whit" or "White"?

2. Also will you please criticize my handwriting? MRS. C. B.

THANK you for your kind words. The name of this popular musical director is spelled Paul Whitman, and is so pronounced as "Whit" or "White."

2. Your handwriting needs more care, much more care. In the details. You gave a good foundation, but the letters should be formed most methodically. Leave off the curly-cues from your capitals and begin the reconstruction of your writing by forming your "a's" and "e's" and that "t's" so that each letter is proud of itself.

HOOVER DEPARTS FROM CUSTOM ON MAC DONALD VISIT

Premier First Notable of Foreign Land to Stay at White House Since 1860.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 5.—When the prime minister of Great Britain and his daughter, Isabel Macdonald, walked through the main door at 1700 Pennsylvania avenue today and were conducted to the great suites, something very closely akin to a record fell.

The last time that a man of Italian descent had visited and dined with the president of the United States was back in 1860. Then President James Buchanan had the prince of Wales, father of the present King George, as his guest.

Not since that time has royalty or "commoner" of Macdonald's station been so cordially welcomed. True, there have been emperors, kings and queens, but they always have stayed elsewhere.

When the prince of Wales came here some years ago to return President Wilson's visit to his country, he and his suite were quartered at the luxurious Perry Belmont mansion on New Hampshire avenue. And when the king and queen of Belgium came to Washington for the same purpose as Britain's prince, they put up at the residence on sixteenth street, now the Mexican embassy.

In 1925, while Sir Auckland Geddes was British ambassador to this country, Lloyd George came visiting. He made his headquarters at the Willard hotel.

Mackenzie King, prime minister of Canada, was in Washington in 1927 and was a guest of the Canadian legation. The crown prince of Sweden lived at the Swedish embassy here during his visit to the capital two years ago.

Nor did the famous Queen Marie of Rumania and her two children stay at the White House during their memorable visit three years ago. They were guests at the Rumanian legation.

There are doubtless very good reasons why these listed famous visitors weren't guests at the White House during their stay here. President Hoover's decision to have the Macdonalds as his guests is, therefore, a distinct departure from the regular order of things.

JOE LEVY RESIGNS MATCHMAKER JOB

(Associated Press Licensed Wire)

PORTLAND, Ore., Oct. 5.—The municipal boxing commission was without a matchmaker today after Joe Levy, who held the berth two years, tendered his resignation. Frank Longner, chairman yesterday while American Legion members gathered forces asking discharge of all members of the commission and substitution of new ones.

Levy, who said he would leave shortly for Los Angeles to consider another position as matchmaker, declared he thought he would be handicapped to remain in Portland with so many offers tendered him in other sections of the country. Claims have been broadcast for several weeks that boxing under the present commission plan was not being operated to the best interests of the city charity fund and war veteran organizations which were to benefit by the profits.

Longner said Levy's resignation would have no effect on the meeting between the boxing commission and the city council at which the city statistician is expected to present an audit of the commission's books.

LA FOLLETT CASE JURY DEADLOCKED

PORTLAND, Ore., Oct. 4.—Jurors in the criminal non-support case of Charles R. La Follett, state representative from Washington county, after being locked up for the night, resumed deliberations this morning, but were reported still in a deadlock.

The jurors filed back in the court room late yesterday and asked Circuit Judge Stevenson for further instructions. He declared he believed the case and evidence was sufficiently clear for the jurors to arrive at a decision.

La Follett is charged with refusing to support his wife and four minor children.
