PRUNE HARVEST BARS HUNTERS IN SOME LOCALITIES

Garden Valley and Melrose farming districts were today closed to hunting, according to announcements being made by the property owners of those sections. The season on pheasants and quail opens tomorrow and the two districts now being closed have been very popular hunting grounds for local bird hunters.

The owners, however, declare that it would be very dangerous to permit shooting at present as so many people are employed in the orchards, due to the extremely late harvest, and promiscuous shooting would endanger many lives.

All of the Garden Valley section is being closed, while Melrose is closed from Rocky Point to the forks of the river, both the river and hill land being posted.

Trespass notices are being posted on the property today.

The bird season opens tomorrow under the following provisions:

"Chinese pheasants, sooty or blue grouse, ruffed grouse or native pheasants, open season from October 15 to October 31 of each year, both dates inclusive. Bag limit, four of any such birds in any one day, or eight during any seven consecutive days; provided, that not more than one female Chinese pheasant may be killed in any seven consecutive days; provided further, that there shall be no open season on Chinese pheasants in Lincoln, Tillamook, Clatsop and Curry counties, in game district No. one (1) in the state of Oregon.

"There shall be no open season for mountain or plumed and California or valley quail, except that in Douglas, Jackson, Josephine, Yamhill, Coos and Curry counties an open season shall be from October 15 to 31 of each year. Bag limit, 10 of such birds in any seven consecutive days.

MARRIED MAN'S WILD PARTY LEADS TO MURDER CHARGE

(Associated Press Leased Wire)

CHICAGO, Oct. 14.—The price John Preston was paying today for a Saturday night party with two young women companions was in jail and a murder charge against him. One of the young women, Miss Agnes Johnston, 26, was dead. She had been attacked, then strangled.

Preston, who is married, denied knowledge of how Miss Johnston was killed. Two men held them up, he said, and drove away with her.

Miss Johnston's body was found in a clump of bushes not far from the spot where Preston's rented automobile had been abandoned. It was on a little used roadway near West Chicago. The young woman had been severely beaten. Her clothing was torn and her face was cut and swollen. There were finger marks on her neck.

Miss Mathilda Murphy, consin of Miss Johnston, and her companion on the Saturday night party, told of events preceding the slaying.

They had gone with Preston she said, only after much insistence by him, and they became alarmed at his behavior after he had several drinks at a roadhouse.

Upon their demanding that he take them home, all three got into the car. Preston, Miss Murphy said, continued his objectionable manner, and both women leaped from the machine and ran. Miss Murphy escaped, although Preston struck her in the face, she said. When she picked herself up Preston was carrying the struggling Johnston girl to the car and shortly afterward he drove away.

COLDS MAY DEVELOP INTO PNEUMONIA

Coughs from colds may lead to serious trouble. You can stop them now with Creomulsion, an emulsified creosote that is pleasant to take. Creomulsion is a medical discovery with two-fold action; it soothes and heals the inflamed membranes and inhibits germ growth.

Of all known drugs creosote is recognized by high medical authorities as one of the greatest healing agencies for coughs from colds and bronchial irritations. Creomulsion contains, in addition to creosote, other healing elements which soothe and heal the inflamed membranes and stop the irritation, while the creosote goes on to the stomach, is absorbed into the blood, attacks the seat of the trouble and checks the growth of the germs.

Creomulsion is guaranteed satisfactory in the treatment of coughs from colds, bronchitis and minor forms of bronchial irritations, and is excellent for building up the system after colds or flu. Money refunded if not relieved after taking according to directions. Ask your druggist. (adv.)

GOOD-NIGHT STORIES
By Max Trell

Knarf Gets an Oat-Meal—But He's Still Hungry.

One day Mij, Flor, Hanid, Yam and Knarf—the five shadow-children with the turned-about names—made themselves so small that when they walked in the grass it rose over their heads like trees. That is, you will agree, exceedingly small. Shadows can make themselves as small as they please. They are like rubber-bands which can stretch or roll together.

Well, they took a walk through the grass in the meadow, for they were in the country, you see. The huge blades of grass waved in the breeze, making a loud whirring noise. Perhaps you have never heard grass whirring. You have missed a great deal. The very next time you are in the country, you must make a point of listening to the grass. All you must do is make yourself as small as your shadow. That is easily done, I am sure. Simply do as your shadow does.

Into the whirring grass walked the shadow-children and, by and by, they came to a green stalk with a yellow cup at the top of it.

"That's a buttercup," said Hanid.

"Let's climb into it and get a cup of butter," Knarf said.

But no one paid any attention to him. He was always getting himself and others into trouble. It was astonishing how much trouble he caused.

A little farther on they came to another stem with a white and purple flower on it.

"It's a clover," Flor announced.

"Let's jump over the clover," Knarf said. Again no one paid any heed to him. Then they came to a stem with a blue flower on it.

"That's a blue-bell," Yam said.

"Oh, let's ring the blue-bell." But they didn't. They kept right on walking until they came into a field where all the stalks were straw-colored. At the top of each stalk was a cluster of seeds which hung down.

"Oats!" exclaimed Knarf.

"Lets climb up and get a meal."

The others gazed at him questioningly. "And get a meal—?" they repeated.

"Certainly," said the shadow-boy. "An oat-meal!" Didn't you know that?"

They smiled. "We've heard of oatmeal," they said, "but it's not the kind of a meal you mean. It's a cereal."

"It doesn't matter what you call it. It's a meal. The children have it for breakfast every morning and I'm going to have it now." And with that he wound his legs around the stalk and climbed up.

"Come down," the others warned. "Something will happen to you if you don't." They were not sure what it might be, but they knew it would be something. And something it was, sure enough.

No sooner did he reach the cluster of seeds and start to look around for the oat-meal he hoped to find there, than along came the farmer with a scythe.

"Zz-z-z," went the scythe, as the farmer swung it through the oats. It cut through the straw-colored stalks close to the ground and over they fell, one on top of the other.

"Jump!" shouted the others to Knarf. It was too late. The scythe cut through his oat-stalk and down he fell, head-over-heels, landing under a heap of stalks where he lay, too frightened to move.

And if the others hadn't come by and picked him up, he would probably be lying there still.
