MONTANA DRIVER FALLS ASLEEP AND WRECKS CAR

(News-Review Douglas County Special)

MYRTLE CREEK, Ore., Oct. 29.—W. A. Kirby of Thompson, Mont., had a narrow escape from death Sunday afternoon while driving north through the canyon south of Pioneer bridge.

Mr. Kirby was returning from a visit to his daughter in Oakland, Calif., and had driven until 1 a. m. After a short rest he resumed his journey. During the afternoon he fell asleep and while traveling about 30 miles per hour his car crashed into the rocky cliff at the right side of the road. The Ford car was completely demolished, but Mr. Kirby escaped with minor injuries. He came into Myrtle Creek and had his wounds attended to and, leaving his wrecked car behind, went on to his home by stage.

GLENDALF TEAM BEATS OAKLAND BY SCORE 12-0

(News-Review Douglas County Special)

GLENDALF, Oct. 29.—The Glendale high school football team defeated the Oakland high school football team by a score of 12 to 0 at Oakland last Friday. It was a case of the grasshoppers getting the best of the gobblers as the Oakland lads averaged considerably more weight than the Glendale team. The first touchdown was made when Condray carried the ball across on a series of line backs.

The second touchdown was made when Condray ran the ball 40 yards after intercepting a pass.

The Oakland boys will play a return game at Glendale on November 1, Armistice Day, at which time the real game is looked for. Next Friday, November 1, the Myrtle Creek high school football team will meet the Glendale boys on the local field.

Sourdoughs Find Buried Gold in Ruins of Abandoned Mining Town

(Associated Press Local Wire)

VERINGTON, Nev., Oct. 28.—Aurora, one of the west's "ghost" towns, whose streets once echoed to the tramp of sourdoughs and plodding burros, again has yielded "pay dirt."

Not from the earth that men probed hopefully in quest of riches in a bygone era of the golden west, but in the ruins of an old adobe building was a small fortune recovered.

Buried treasure—$5,000 worth of 20 gold pieces—was there, stained with blood and lying undisturbed for 65 years to become, strangely enough, a "strike" for two old prospectors, Wallace Dowell and James Handel.

It was chance that brought an unexpected change in the fortunes of the men, two of the fast disappearing type of prospectors who followed the trails over mountains and desert.

In an ancient motor vehicle which they nursed alone—one driving, the other holding the clutch, Dowell and Handel stopped one day recently in the shadow of the crumbling walls of Aurora, 60 miles east of here, seeking relief from the desert heat.

The desolate picture which greeted the prospectors as they paused for their slacks, conveyed nothing of the one time greatness of the village that today lives only in history and legend.

Once Aurora was a roaring town, coveted by both California and Nevada and finally marked on the map of the latter after a federal survey established its claim. It was "bad" even in an era when elvish virtue was at low ebb among the boomtowns of the youthful west.

Then came the rebellion against the dominance of the lawless element in February, 1864. The law abiding organized a vigilante committee, seized the armory and established order after arresting the sheriff, his deputies and four desperadoes whom they hanged.

It was concerning that cleanup that a story about Governor Nye of Nevada is told. Hearing of the excitement he telegraphed Samuel Young, then a county commissioner, warning that no violence must be done. Back went the laconic reply: "All quiet and orderly. Four men will be hung in half an hour."

And if one of the legends about the town can be credited, it was amid the ruins of the home of one of the departed highwaymen that Dowell and Handel rested.

Like countless numbers before them, the two began a search for hidden loot, but with far greater success. Below the floor under a pile of adobe bricks, they found an old-fashioned strong box.

The wooden lining was ripped away and a shower of 20 gold pieces rolled out. They were dated from 1852 to 1888—contemporaneous with the stirring days of two-state control and vigilante law.

California Boy Is Musical Marvel

Ruggero Ricci, eight-year-old California violinist, who created a sensation in New York when he made his debut at the opening concert of the Manhattan Symphony. The child played the Mendelssohn concerto, one of the standard classics of the repertoire for violin and orchestra, and he played it without compromise of any sort, either as to its length or its content, even inserting the difficult Kreisler cadenza in its opening movement. He was completely wrapped up in his performance, apparently forgetting his audience.

Ever-increasing demand for this better method of treating colds is shown in the familiar Vicks slogan, "Made famous when Vicks reached '12 Million Jars Used Yearly'."

Later raised to "21 Million"—there are now "Over 28 Million Jars Used Yearly"—Adv.
