

RIDING QUALITY IN CAR REQUIRED

Numerous factors of consideration enter into the average car owner's mind when planning a motor tour. Chief among these, especially where a long journey is planned, is the riding qualities of his car.

In this day of highly improved highways where one can drive hundreds of miles without ever leaving a paved road, long journeys by automobile, often times from coast to coast, are quite the usual thing. It is on such trips as these that the riding qualities of the motor car mean so much to the driver and passengers.

Experts point out that comfortable riding qualities do not necessarily depend on the type of road traveled. They state that the design and construction features of the car are major factors in providing maximum comfort for driver and passengers under all road and traffic conditions.

Whipple-Overland engineers declare that in the design of the Whipple lines of four and six cylinder cars, marked attention was centered in providing a car that would bring to the owner a new sense of comfort regardless of the length of the journey. Exhaustive tests were conducted over every type of highway, these tests finally resulting in the perfection of the current Whipple lines which, among other things, have won an outstanding reputation for their superior riding qualities.

Increase in the Whipple wheel base, longer spring length both front and rear, oversize balloon tires and shock absorbers have been contributing factors in the comfortable riding qualities of the car. These features, combined with the larger and roomier bodies, full force feed lubrication, silent timing chain, invar-struct pistons, large four-wheel brakes, and the added convenience of "finger-tip control," have placed the Whipple in a distinctive position in the low priced of four and six-cylinder cars.

Thousands of owners of these striking models, many of whom had previously owned higher priced cars, state that the high standard performance of the Whipple fours and sixes are comparable with cars that sell in the higher price classifications.

Not alone have the Superior Whipple cars won a wide acceptance on the part of male drivers but women owners declare that the ease with which the Whipple cars are handled in heavy city traffic, parking and over the wide open highways make them ideal for all purposes.

BOYS, TUBS, FORDS AND DOGS TO VIE IN STREET RACES

As was promised in yesterday's issue of this paper a description of the first five of the fifteen events for the sports program of the Armistice Day celebration is made today.

The tub-chalet race requires three teams of seven boys each. One boy will ride in the tub and the other six will pull the tub (by means of a rope) over the course. The three teams will compete against each other, the first one in wins.

In the "limited" dog race no dog may be entered which stands higher than twenty inches at the shoulders (top). The leash by which he is led is not to be under two feet in length or longer than four feet. The course will be over the block and return. There is no other limit placed even as to the number of entries.

In the free-for-all dog race any number may enter, any size dogs, undersize, over-stuffed, tapered or elongated will be accepted. Leashes may be of such cord, binder twine or log chains. The course will be the same as that for the "limited."

The rescue relay is for teams of

CHAMPAGNE SPREE SPEEDS 2 BANDITS ON WAY TO PRISON

(Associated Press Special Wire)
TACOMA, Wash., Nov. 5.—Committing robbery Sunday, captured Monday, sentenced to serve from ten to fifteen years in the state penitentiary Tuesday.

So ground the wheels of justice here for Edward Joseph Kelly, 26, and Alfred Leroy Burnett 23, both of San Francisco. This morning they were sentenced to serve from 10 to 15 years in the Washington state penitentiary after pleading guilty to robbing the manager and cashier of the Fox Rialto theatre of $1400 Sunday night. The sentence was passed by Judge Fred G. Remann in superior court.

Liquor proved an effective ally of police in clearing up the crime. After making a perfect getaway, the bandits, their heads spinning because of their sudden wealth, went on a champagne spree which ended when police crashed into their hotel room to arrest them as bandit suspects. They had spent more than $500 for liquor in less than 24 hours after the robbery, they admitted in signed confessions.

BOMB ATTACKS BLAMED FOR G. O. P. LEADER'S DEATH

(Associated Press Special Wire)
CHICAGO, Nov. 5.—Lawrence F. King, 45, republican leader and trustee of the Chicago sanitary district, died suddenly at his home last night after an illness of several days.

Friends of King saw in his death the indirect result of two bomb attacks against him and one against his secretary. Last December a powerful bomb exploded on the porch of his Chicago home, doing considerable damage and terrifying his five motherless children. Since that night, his friends said, he had not been the same and has been constantly worried about the welfare and safety of his children.

Blue Blood And Red by ROBERT TERRY SHANNON

CHAPTER LI

Not consciously did they draw closer together until their shoulders touched—it came about as though by some inherent magnetic attraction that was a force more powerful than will power, as potent as Youth itself.

An instant remained in which it would have been possible for Marian to draw back but there was a tremor running through her—through both of them—that nullified all thought-out intentions.

Under the aegis of this delicious intoxication she felt his arm steal around her, circling with tender pressure until, with a weary sigh, and with a surrendering movement that was all her own, she leaned into his arms with her face uplifted. As his head bent over hers—as it had bent before—their lips yielded together.

In one tempestuous moment she realized that this was no mere tormenting delight of sensation—only love could so scatter and confuse all her previous ideas of conduct. Only the man named by Destiny for her mate could blot out all her concern with the rest of life and release these wild currents of surrender in her blood.

She allowed herself to be pressed more tightly in his arms, relaxing with a heedless acquiescence. Just for one great, free moment she remained thus way and then, half freeing herself from his embrace, she looked up at him, smiling mysteriously.

Again he kissed her and there was utter freedom and willingness in her response. At last she leaned her head back on his shoulder with a nestling movement for comfort, now that the first exultation ebbed into peacefulness.

"You do love me, don't you?" she whispered.

"So much that my head and my heart are both swimming. Do you remember when I first saw you? Well, I loved you from that instant and it grows and grows with every passing second. Nobody ever loved a girl as much as I love you."

"I'm glad—I'm glad—"

Again and again she was locked in his arms while kisses rained on her lips. Then again she spoke: "Eddie, dear, how can we ever part after this?"

"I can't bear to think of it," he murmured.

"Nor I. It couldn't be—life isn't that cruel—that we will have to give each other up. I wouldn't want to live if anybody came between us."

"When did you first love me?" he asked, in awe.

"I think I knew it practically at the start. It was all there from the beginning but it was locked up—like a flower in the bud. There could never have been anyone else for me except you, dear."

"And I was such a dumb-bell that I couldn't believe it!" he declared. "I thought that the odds were a thousand to one against me. I can't believe yet that you love me. It's too wonderful to be true."

Her lips pressed against his for answer.

"How impractical you are!" she said, with a smile of feminine wisdom. "Where were your eyes—couldn't you see?"

"I was blind and when I look into the future and realize what I'm up against—on the outside—I'm more in the dark than ever."

"WORTH WEIGHT IN GOLD"

Verdict of Woman Who Tried Pinkham's Compound

Tully, N. Y.—"It hurt me to walk or sit down without help and I felt sick and weak. My mother-in-law took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and she induced me to take it. I am now on the fourth bottle and have a new need Lydia E. Pinkham's Sensitive Wash. The medicine that will do for me what the Vegetable Compound and Sensitive Wash have done are certainly worth their weight in gold. I think I have given them a fair trial and I expect to take two more bottles of the Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. CHARLES MORGAN, R. F. D. 1, Tully, N. Y.

that will do for me what the Vegetable Compound and Sensitive Wash have done are certainly worth their weight in gold. I think I have given them a fair trial and I expect to take two more bottles of the Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. CHARLES MORGAN, R. F. D. 1, Tully, N. Y.

With a snuggling movement she drew even closer to him. "I don't want to worry now, dear—I don't even want to think."

Love, as they found it, was in this first dawning of its true realization as excitingly unreal as a fairyland dream. With the first flash of its delight they were happy as children are, and as innocent in the expression of their feelings as though Marian had never dreamed of the behavior of the new jazz generation. And this too, despite the fact that Eddie had come up from the hectic world of wickedness and sophistication.

They lingered on, reveling in the luminous delight that pulsed around them, marveling at the miracle of love and the fate that had so strangely brought them together. Time after time they had to tell each other of their wonderment at the other's thrilling and lovely powers. No other people, they were sure, had ever loved so sincerely, so bewilderingly with heavenly delight.

The moon rose toward its zenith and the whole world around them glowed with the gentle light that flooded all around them.

Yet the enchantment is so fragile that the hard facts of life have a way of penetrating its fragile fabric even as silvered minutes fly.

"I think I ought to tell you everything about the girl who came down here to see me from New York," he said, suddenly.

In his arms, Marian shuddered slightly.

"I suppose it would be better—but I dread to hear about it," he said, trying to speak with surety. "A long time ago I thought I had a heavy crush on her—but it was only kid stuff. I didn't dream that you even existed then, dear. There were a few kisses and some wild talk—but nothing else. She's not at all like the kind of girl you are—and after I left she got a crazy idea she was madly in love with me. She found out where I was and came down here."

"Did you tell her about me?" Marian asked.

"I told her all about you—and tried to convince her she ought to go back. But she's got the nut idea in her brain that she wants to marry me, and she's going to stick around in the county seat for a while to see what might happen."

"How awful!"

"It's just one of those things—a girl with a lonesome heart and the wrong slant. But at that, she's not bad hearted. It's just a delusion she has—but it almost wrecked my life."

"Are you sure you never really loved her?"

"Never!"

"Well, it's too bad—but, after all, it's such a tiny obstacle in our path—isn't it, dear? I know you're telling me the truth, and I feel sorry for the poor girl. But what does it matter—what can it matter?"

Eddie felt now, slowly, the return of his old despondency.

"It matters terribly—when your father forbids me to see you and practically threatens to shoot me if I ever look at you."

But there was an elevation of the spirit about Marian that refused to recognize any such menace.

"That doesn't matter really at all," she declared.

"Maybe—but I don't want him taking a shot at me all the same."

"I mean it doesn't matter what he thinks. Nobody—not even my own father or mother—has the right to spoil my life. I'd marry you, Eddie, if they never spoke to me again."

Suddenly, like a slow descending weight, as heavy as the universe itself, he realized the awesome responsibility that rested upon his shoulders. Love was vastly more than a thing of kisses. It meant the taking charge of her whole heart, her whole life. To realize that Marian Thorndike was able so courageously to cut herself off from everything she had always known and risk her very existence upon the strength of his heart gave Eddie Regan a soberness that filled him with a grave delight.
