GOOD-NIGHT STORIES

By Max Trel

The Shadow-Children Listen in Vain for the Nightingale's Song.

"Tonight," Hand said, "we are going to hear the nightingale sing."

MJ, Flor, Yam and Knarf—the other little shadow-children—were all turned out to look up in surprise. "Where are we going to hear it sing?" MJ wanted to know.

"On a photograph record," said Knarf, and smiled to himself at the cleverness of his remark.

Hand shook her head. "No, we're going into the woods," she said.

Nightingales, you must know, are found in Europe. And that's exactly where the shadows were. In travelling around the world with their little masters and mistresses they arrived at last in Austria. They were stopping in a little farmhouse nestled among the hills, close to the banks of the Danube river. There is a very famous town called "The Blue Danube." I would whistle it for you if I were sure you could hear me. But I am sure you can find someone else to whistle it for you. Well, that time is about the same river near which the farmhouse stood.

"Tonight," Hand continued, "after dinner we are all going into the woods. And then we'll hear the nightingale sing."

"But," Yam broke in, "why don't we go now before it gets dark? Maybe it will go to sleep."

"Ha-ha, nightingales don't sleep at night," said Knarf. "You don't know anything about birds. Nightingales stay awake all night and sing."

"Aren't they awake in the day time, too?"

"Perhaps they are, but no one ever heard them sing, unless—" he added with a shy smile—"unless there is an eclipse."

An eclipse, my dear, is when the shadow of the moon covers the sun in midday and makes everything go dark as night for a few moments. Knarf was a very knowing shadow-boy, very knowing indeed.

Just as Hand said, as soon as they finished dinner the red children, led by father, started off for the woods. The shadows (like all shadows do) trailed on behind them. There was a full moon and they all felt sharp and bright. Of course, none of the red children paid the slightest bit of attention to their shadows. To tell the truth, they didn't even know they were there. This didn't trouble the shadows any. They were too busy thinking about the nightingale to think of whether they were being thought about or not.

"I wonder what a nightingale's song sounds like," Yam remarked.

"It sounds like a whistle, only louder," said MJ.

"Oh, no," Flor put in, "it sounds like the song of a teakettle."

"Of course not! It sounds like the whistling of a gale in the middle of the night," said Knarf. "The name of a nightingale tells you that!"

"It sounds," said Hand softly, "like the most beautiful bird-song in the world—better than a canary, better than a lark, better than a linnet."

By this time they had reached the woods. It was perfectly dark.

"Don't make a sound," father warned the red children, "other-wise you'll frighten it."

But the shadows kept right on arguing as loudly as ever.

"It's like a rooster!" cried MJ.

"No, it's like a teakettle," cried Flor.

"No, no, it's like a gale!" cried Knarf.

"No, no, no, it's like the most beautiful bird-song," cried Hand.

"Pre-ss-se," begged Yam, "why don't you wait until you hear it first?" They said no need to hurry. And you know what happened? Although the red children couldn't hear a word that was being said by their shadows, the nightingale, who was standing on a nearby branch, heard very well. So frightened did he become that, uttering one single chirp, of dismay, off he flew to a far part of the woods where no one would be able to find him.

Everybody, including the shadow-children, returned home extremely disappointed—all except Knarf.

"Fought!" said he. "I'm glad I did not hear more of it. It sings no better than any common sparrow."

NICK CARTER'S TIRE SHOP

Dear friends, all of you that owe me for tires that I past due, I would be glad if you would come in and pay me, for this reason, there is an old grey wolf in Portland, his name is Lee Tire and Rubber Co., he is a vicious old wolf.

What he wants is money. Feed him plenty of money and he will smile, and if he does not get money he shows his teeth, snarls and snaps at you. This old wolf went through here the other day, he showed his teeth at me. What he wanted was money. He will be back by the fifteenth and if I do not feed him money I am afraid he will bite a leg off me.

Years for ever and ever, NICK CARTER.

ALLEGED AUTO THIEF OF GRANTS PASS TAKEN HERE

Louis Alfred Costa, 18, a transient, was arrested yesterday by City Officer Ray Ranch, charged with auto theft at Grants Pass.
