fowls, and they should be caught by the wings instead of by the legs as is usually done. If the crops are to be removed the slit should be made down the back of the neck, as no cuts on the front of the neck are desired. Birds with the crops removed go into the second or "choice" grade. The prime grade corresponds to the local association's "first" grade, the choice to the local No. 1 grade and the medium to No. 2, while the common consists of culls. Bleeding and condition of the crop, he pointed out, are more essential factors than pin feathers. Only the fan feathers should be left on the wings, and all feathers on the legs should be removed, and also on the neck up to where the head wrapper will cover. He detailed the semi-scale method, but said that it was not to be recommended for farm killing. Washing the feet is very important, he said, as it improves the appearance and takes little time. It should be done before the bird is hung up.

No Weight Requirements
The government grades are not based on weight standards, he said. Light hens and toms, under 9 and 12 pounds respectively, however, are packed separately and sometimes are sold at a premium for the family trade, especially at Thanksgiving and Christmas time. A three-pound variation in different classes is allowed in birds packed together.

He also explained the marketing system, the government using stickers and leg bands. He urged that trademarks be established and used, showing the advertising methods of Nevada and Idaho, where healthy demand has been created by advertising through labels, folders and other methods.

He advised, however, that stickers be used instead of stamps, as the vegetable ink sometimes runs and discolors the flesh where stamps are used.

In establishing a grading system, he said, the government, through examinations such as are being given in connection with the school, licenses graders and inspectors who are found to be qualified. Some state departments, such as the college extension service, or a department of agriculture, where one exists, takes charge of the inspection work and supervises the activities of the graders, and sees that all graders are uniform at each loading station. Certificates are made out in triplicate, one going to the shipper, so that he will know exactly what grades were loaded in each car; another goes to the state department and the third to Washington.

Attendance Pleases
The interest shown in the school which started this morning greatly pleased those who have been responsible for it. Representatives of all leading buyers registered early, while the state of Washington where the grading service is also being established was very well represented by officers of the department of agriculture. Local growers are also attending in large numbers, and while many are not planning to take the grading tests, they are learning a great deal regarding quality and government standards together with killing and dressing methods, which will be of much assistance to them in preparing their birds for market.

While the school is directly intended for educating men to take the positions of federal graders, Mr. Heltz is allowing a great deal of diversion from the main purpose and is giving much valuable information to the growers. He encourages questions and endeavors to help the growers as much as possible in the solution of their individual problems.

STATE MARKET AGENT'S LETTER
Wheat Market at Portland.
State Income Tax.
Tariff Benefit Limited.
Want Lobbyists Tagged.
Grange Officers Honored.

By SEYMOUR JONES
The Portland Grain Exchange gives the following review of business to last Saturday: The sentiment during the week ending was all in favor of buyers. With a more confident attitude toward stocks and general business, reports of a short Australian crop, deterioration and lower estimates from Argentine, future prices anticipated a better demand. The U. S. visible supply showed a further decrease of over 1,500,000 bushels. The first slight interest in Pacific coast wheat by British buyers, for over 60 days, resulted in new pared business of about 5,000 tons from Columbia river ports. The local market was just getting into line with export prices. The first of the week, when anticipated higher prices raised prices above a workable level. Portland prices for the week show net gains of 3 3/4c for December, 4c for March and 3 1/2c for May. Trading on exchange during week, 520,000 bushels. Portland, Astoria and Longview visible supply 4,139,174 bushels. Six cars received in Portland during the week (week).

The Grange Bulletin of November 23 has the following relative to the above subject: "The last session of the Oregon legislature adopted an income tax measure as part of the taxation system for the state, but the statute has been referred to the people for final adoption. The Grange will have to stand the brunt of the campaign to save the income tax measure, and, as State Master Palmer said in his annual report to the National Grange, 'We are hoping that at the next election we may finally dispose of the income tax controversy in Oregon by a favorable majority at the polls.'"

November, so we may turn our energies to other pressing matters of interest to agriculture."

Minnie E. Bond of Eugene, who has been the popular lecturer of the State Grange for about 16 years, refuses to be a candidate for re-election, and M. C. Glover of Boring announces that he is not a candidate for state master. Both have been voted for in some of the subordinate Granges. Mr. Glover is now state overseer.

The farmers of Oregon are inclined to be conscientiously "dry," but are very anxious, to see the state go wet right now and Jupiter tried to answer their wish yesterday, though somewhat feebly.

Health Bulletin
The Christmas Seal
(State Board of Health)
Sufficient funds directed toward the prevention of disease in any county will bring returns in increased industrial efficiency, domestic harmony and community progress through freedom from epidemics, and ability to meet every day demands of endurance and energy. The returns will be directly in proportion to the care used in the selection of the results to be obtained and the amount of money invested. This claim is based upon the combined experience of scientifically administered programs that have been placed under the microscope of scientific analysis. One of the agencies serving as the salesman of community and personal health is the National Tuberculosis association and its 1500 affiliated state and county associations. The price it asks for the commodity it has to sell—health, is your conscientious guarding of your personal health, the health of your family and of your community. Its legal tender is the Christmas seal. The annual sale of the tuberculosis Christmas seal is the sole source of revenue of the Oregon Tuberculosis association and of its twenty affiliated county public health associations.

The indirect benefits which have resulted from the campaign against tuberculosis are among the most interesting things in the history of the disease. Because it was so dreaded and claimed so many young persons it was possible to interest the community in taking measures against it which have had a marked effect in preventing other diseases. Thus the campaign to have milk pasteurized not only caused a reduction in the number of children who developed tuberculosis but caused a tremendous reduction in the number of infants who died from other causes. Measures taken in schools and other public places to prevent infection with tuberculosis through the use of the common drinking cup, etc., have greatly reduced the incidence of other communicable diseases.

Public health nurses originally employed to instruct the care for tuberculosis patients in their own homes have proved so valuable in safeguarding the public health in other ways as well that few communities which have once employed one are willing to be long without this service. Medical examinations of school children undertaken in some instances to discover cases of tuberculosis have discovered so many other things which were hindering the healthful development of children that they are coming more constantly into use. And so the fight against tuberculosis has come to be more and more closely tied up with measures for promoting the public health. Activities begun for the special purpose of reducing deaths from tuberculosis have proved their value in improving the public health, and improving the public health has been found to lower the tuberculosis death rate.

Mr. Curry improving—William Curry, patient at Roseburg General hospital, is reported to be getting along nicely.
