POLLY AND HER PALS

A Kiss for Corinna

By MAY CHRISTIE

CHAPTER 40.
Mr. Criswell woke from his slumber in the library, the papers that Malvey Craig had brought from downtown in his lap. "Where was the young chap?" He rang for the butler, who said, unctuously: "The gentleman went out in the grounds with Miss Denise and the Countess. Shall I give him a message, sir?" "No. They'll be back presently." Mr. Criswell smiled indulgently at his own thoughts. "Let him know I want to see him when he comes in."

Very good, sir. Alone, again, the Spring sunshine shining alight the fine old room made Mr. Criswell think of his own youth. It seemed quite close just now. . . . happy days when he had been poor and struggling and ambitious. . . . determined to garner dollars to help his mother, who was again left a widow, and the little laughing fairy of a half-sister who, years afterward, had married and given birth to her own replica in Denise. A good marriage for this little ward of his. . . . it would be the making of his girl!

By "good" his mind was not on wealth, but on the common denominator of all successful unions, which is love and happiness. "There were not too many decent, square, hard-working fellows to be found, these days, Van Tye! . . . Mortimer. . . . the sons of most of his 'successful' competitors were too pleasure-loving, lazy, unambitious, when they weren't worse. . . . Young Craig was clever and reliable, and at the same time (which was important to a woman) a most personable youth. Denise and he made a handsome pair. And from the worldly point of view—since Craig was in his office and giving exceptional satisfaction—it wouldn't be too bad a match. . . . He'd see to that, of course. Rapid promotion would be justified. Now, at this moment, he heard Denise's laughter and quieter masculine tones.

He opened the library door to greet them: "I hope I haven't stayed too long, sir," apologized young Craig. "Natalie was making a movie of us down in the little cove. It's sure to be a wow!" Denise exclaimed. "The old man smiled indulgently. 'We shall have to have a private view of the picture when it's finished.' Then, collecting the papers and slipping them back into GOOD BABY buggy for safe cheap. Inquire 620 S. Pine.

their envelope, he handed them to the young man. "Take care of them." "I'll see to that," chirruped his niece, in great good fettle. "I'm personally conducting him back to town." "Not in the roadster?" Her uncle raised his brows with a sort of mock-alarm humor. Then, to Malvey: "This little girl is what they call a speed-fiend. I can't entrust these documents to her tender mercies, not to speak of the safety of one of my most promising employees. No, my dear child, let the chauffeur take you in the limousine back to the city." "Calm yourself, ducky!" She planted an airy kiss on the top of his bald pate. "We're going with Natalie."

When the Countess and the young fellow had bidden adieu to Mr. Criswell, she lingered behind for a moment, half curious about and anxious for the old man's approval. "You didn't mind me taking him out into the garden, did you, uncle?" Now Mr. Criswell had noticed young Craig's ruffled, embarrassed appearance. This was due to Denise's realistic rendering of an emotional nymph in the arms of her lover. But how was Mr. Criswell to know that? Didn't the perturbation indicate that Craig was attracted to this very pretty maiden? thought her fond uncle. "You sly little puss, vamping one of my most useful young men!" He shook a waggle finger at her, smiling indulgently. "No, I'm not angry, but you're not to carry him off his feet and break his heart and ruin him (for the job if you don't mean business)." Denise looked coy, and murmured: "I like him immensely."

Oh! things were shaping just the way she wanted them. It was a great feather in her cap to get uncle's approval. "Now don't keep him waiting when he's got to get back to the office." "And I've my hospital committee meeting, too," she supplemented. (Oh, foster the good impression of her own earnestness, her social regeneration! Of course young Craig.

she wasn't going near the boring session! She was dodging it for a dress-show with Natalie. But her uncle would never find out the outside.) "That's a good girl." Her uncle dismissed her. . . . They dropped Malvey at the downtown subway and then drove to the camera shop on Madison avenue to leave the movie film to be developed.

"You certainly made a bold play for him, Denise, old dear, and I'm not at all certain you haven't frightened him off forever," remarked the candid friend, with considerable relish. "You were the she-vamp of the ages in that movie and you fairly scared him into blue fits!" "Nonsense! He was as excited as a baby. Didn't you see how flushed he looked when we got back into the house?" "Don't kid yourself that that was L.D.V. When a young fellow has his heelsite torn from his collar—

"Oh, shut up, and don't be spiteful. I was as good as Denise, and he was thrilled to the marrow!" "Vain little vamp!" "I tell you, I've got him!" Natalie laughed shrilly. "Got him, nothing! I'll bet you don't even know what he's doing this evening!" Denise flushed angrily. That shaft had gone right home. Before she could frame a suitably crushing reply, her friend continued, peevishly: "But I'll wager you anything you like he's got a date with his Corinna! You'd better dash round to your beauty shop at 8, and keep tabs on her! Oh, it may be sport to try and grab another girl's best beau, but I tell you straight you've got your work cut out for you. To add waiting and planning and cutting in and keeping tabs to vamping would put years on me! I could never, never go to that trouble."

Denise felt like a Venusian about to burst at this tirade, but luckily a salesman approached the girls at this moment. Natalie gave him the film, and was informed that in two days' time it would be finished. "Can't I persuade your friend to make a similar purchase?" the salesman suggested suavely. "Now that the weather is so beautiful, and Summer coming along—and perhaps the young lady will be taking a trip to Europe—film records would greatly aid in the enjoyment of the journey."

Then, suddenly realizing that here was her opportunity for carrying out a half-formulated idea, she said brusquely: "If the film we took today is anything good at all I'll buy a camera. You project the film here, don't you? I'll drop in in a couple of days when it's developed and have a look at it. Any objections, Natalie?" "Not a bit. As I can't come with you, being out of town for the weekend, you can take the receipt now and have a preview by yourself." She dropped her voice teasingly to add: "No one will see your blushing in the darkness!" (Copyright, 1929, King Features Syndicate, Inc.) To Be Continued.
