

DIVINE CHARACTER PRESERVES CHURCH, EVANGELIST SAYS

The church as a divine institution was discussed last night by Evangelist V. K. Allison, speaking at the First Christian church, where revival meetings are being conducted each night. Rev. Allison stated that the greatest drama of the ages was the history of the church and that only a divine institution could have survived the hatred, persecution and betrayals to which it has been subjected. He said that the only thing about the church that is not divine is its membership.

The evangelist pointed out that the church was established upon a divine foundation, and that only with such a foundation could the church have survived the storms of the centuries. He mentioned that the church was a product of divine intervention, and that its message is divine. He closed with the statement that the mission of the church is divine, and that nothing is impossible to the church directed by the Spirit of God.

The subject of tonight's sermon is "Scripture Teaching Salts". Special pipe organ and vocal music is presented each evening.

actual slaying, and that she ran away with "Jack." During her trial and since she has received letters purporting to be signed by Jack, asserting that she was not guilty of the crime. Efforts of authorities to locate the mysterious youth, however, were unsuccessful and he did not come forward to help clear Mrs. Dugan of the crime.

Following her conviction and sentencing to death, an appeal, which was denied, was made to the state board of pardons and paroles asking that she be released and committed to life imprisonment. A subsequent plea to the board, after a superior court jury had found her sane as the result of a sanity hearing, also was denied.

Poison Plot Revealed
Warden Lorenzo Wright created a sensation a few minutes before the hanging by revealing to newspaper men the discovery of what he believed was a plot by Mrs. Dugan to cheat the gallows by taking poison before she was removed to the death chamber.

Acting on a tip that the woman had procured a poison dose, Wright said he transferred her from her prison cell to the condemned chamber about 1 a. m. A search of the abandoned cell, the warden said, led to the discovery beneath a mattress of a 2-ounce bottle of a "deadly poison." The bottle, he said, bore the label of a Florence drug store.

Wright said the woman apparently intended to commit suicide, but was prevented from taking the poison by the vigilance of guards. An investigation has been started to learn the source of the poison.

Last Hours at Cards
Mrs. Dugan spent the hours preceding her execution in the company of the prison chaplain and a few friends. Until after midnight she sat at a card table and played whist with two women friends and a woman prisoner, while outside her cell the death watch proceeded back and forth. Occasionally she reached out to caress a telegram which lay on the table—a farewell message from her daughter, Mrs. Cecil Loveless.

During the course of the game, Mrs. Dugan requested that her "spoons" be served with orange-ade. Several minutes passed before the drink was served, and the condemned woman called to a guard: "Please bring on the orange-ade. I want it now. Tomorrow will be too late."

Smokes and Sings
As the woman was led to the death cell she smoked a cigarette and joked with guards. As they neared the gallows house she laughed and sang "I don't know where I'm going, but I'm on my way."

She kissed two of the guards who left her at the door of the death house and said: "I love everyone connected with the prison. You have all been good to me, and I can't blame you for what the law is going to do to me." The guards were more visibly affected than was the woman who stood in the shadow of the scaffold.

Echo of Yukon Days
A telegram, delivered to her in the condemned cell revealed a hitherto unknown chapter of her early life. The message, signed Ada Hostapple, Seattle, Wash., read: "I sympathize with you and have the greatest admiration for your bravery and grit."

"Ada is an old friend of the Yukon days," Mrs. Dugan said. "Probably you didn't know it, but I was one of those who followed the gold rush into the Yukon."

Mrs. Dugan will be buried in the prison graveyard, in a shroud of white silk which she made herself. Several weeks ago she purchased a casket and paid an undertaker to prepare her body for burial.

Her 82-year-old father, William McDaniels, of Ceres, Calif., was unable to grant her wish to be with her during the hours preceding her death. She refused to disclose the name of her son, and the name of her daughter was not revealed until the message came from her last night.

The defense objected to the form of the complaint with reference to his arrest and attendant publicity, claiming that under circumstances the bank could not be held responsible for the actions of third persons, and this contention was upheld by the court.

The amended complaint asked for $25,000 compensatory damages as redress for alleged ruined credit and reputation, and for an additional $25,000 punitive damages, claimed on the grounds that the act of the bank in refusing to cash the checks was malicious.

Opposing Testimony
In the trial of the case Farleigh presented his alleged deposit slips which he claimed represented deposits in the bank, two of the slips bearing no name or date. The total was slightly over $2,050. He claimed to have issued checks amounting to approximately $1,700.

There was considerable testimony introduced by the plaintiff in an effort to show that the money was handled by bank employees and through regular banking channels as a deposit in the bank.

Disclaimer From Bank
C. D. Rolf, an employee of the bank, working according to the testimony, entirely upon his own responsibility, aided the Gobbiers in handling the receipts and placing the money in the bank vaults for safe-keeping. It was claimed

The defense, on the other hand, claimed that Farleigh came into town without sufficient money to pay freight on his horses, advances that he was given explicit instructions that the bank was not responsible for any of the money and that he was not representing the bank in the work done for the Gobbiers.

Certain payments were made upon Farleigh's checks. It was stated, other amounts were taken from the daily receipts, and some items such as ground rental, parking space rental, etc., were also deducted from the cash. The balance, it was stated, was turned over to Rolf, who paid checks until the fund was exhausted.

Farleigh was arrested when the bank dishonored a check given the Roseburg News-Review for $166 and it was this check that figured largely in the case. The bank claimed that Farleigh had no funds on deposit, other than those carried to cover the early advance, and that there were no funds left in the money held by the Gobbiers at the time the News-Review check was presented for payment.

Following the conclusion of the case, court was adjourned until next Monday, as Judge Brand has several important legal matters demanding his attention in Coos county, and left for his home this morning.
