"Pointed Heels" at Antlers

Phillips Holmes, Fay Wray, William Powell in a scene from the Paramount Picture "Pointed Heels."

WILLIAM POWELL was off with the acting honors in "Pointed Heels," which plays Sunday and Monday at the Antlers theatre. He is the suave, sophisticated and producer of artistic stage revenues who forms the third side to the romance triangle of which Fay Wray and Phillips Holmes are the other components. Mrs. Wray is the show girl who marries Holmes, the youthful song-composer. Their married happiness is almost curbed by the machinations of the urbane Powell, but at the finish the lyric admixture is cleared by a surprise twist in character on the part of Powell who turns out to be not a villain, but just a dem-villain after all.
