RAILROAD TO RUN SPECIAL TRAIN TO AID DAIRY AREAS

State College Heads Plan to Promote Efficient Marketing, More Patronage.

A special demonstration train, one of the most popular and spectacular methods of emphasizing any agricultural project, is announced for Oregon by the S. P. and S. railroad and Oregon State college as another means of assisting the present Oregon dairy industry through economical production, more efficient marketing and increased consumption.

Plans for the train have been approved by W. F. Turner, president of the railroad, and W. J. Kerr, president of O. S. C., as another means of carrying out the present nationwide program designed to lift the dairy industry out of its present depression.

The extension service of the college has been given a free hand in the arrangement of exhibits and program for the special, and P. M. Brandt and N. C. Jamison of the dairy department are planning to present in graphic form the program of the state dairy convention and producers' associations of this state.

The train, probably an eight-car special, will start its state tour at Eugene and will traverse the lines of the Oregon Electric to Portland and Forest Grove, the S. P. & S. to Astoria and the Oregon Trunk through central Oregon to Bend.

W. A. Schoenfeld, regional representative of the farm board, has offered the service of his organization in making the special a success from the marketing standpoint. Interest in this angle is high now because of the movement to unify the cooperative dairy groups of the state.

Local arrangements in the communities along the route are being made by Kenneth Miller, agricultural agent of the railroad, who says he is ready to assist local communities in making the visit of the train a major event of the year. Requests for a place on the train schedule may be made through the county agents or through the railroad representatives.

CHAPTER 8

A door at the end of the dark passage closed on Tom Burns. William Bryce brushed his hands. A little pink rose in his buttonhole drooped downward. He straightened it. With a backward jerk of his head, he motioned Guy to the inner office.

It was in wild disorder. Two chairs were overturned. Pictures on the wall were crooked.

On the table, papers were scattered. The inkstand toppled on its side. A stream of ink trickled over the polished walnut.

From the confusion, Bryce reached over and picked out a photograph. He set it carefully on the top of the filing cabinet, first wiping off a smudge of black.

It was a picture of a young man in a pilot's costume. There was a long panel of the same young aviator on the wall. Pictures of William Bryce, Junior, at whose passionate insistence this factory had been opened. And who was now dead.

Bryce stood there regarding the photograph. He gave a grim shrug. "Who kept my son from death? That fellow's dangerous."

"Yes," said Guy, feeling his way, "it might be wiser—"

"What! Buy him off? Let him come in here and scream orders to me—"

William Bryce was a powerfully built man, quick, energetic. From his stubby, businesslike moustache to his square, nervous hands he was alive and bristling.

He now stood at a big, flat-topped desk and rapped with his knuckles.

"Do you know that he came in here and calmly demanded $1,500? Actually expected me to hand it over without a word? Wanted the check then and there. As though I'm responsible for his kid's health! How am I involved?"

"Did he want the money as a loan?"

"Loan! He's drawn $750 beyond his wages right now. Loan! See that he takes all his stuff and clears out—today! Give orders that he's not to be allowed near the plant."

Guy returned to the workroom. The emptiness gave him a tense, strained feeling—a sense of uneasy apprehension.

Two weeks passed. Toward closing time one Thursday, William Bryce rang.

"Where are the Miller specifications?"

"Miller specifications?"

"Yes—yes! That's what I said. I gave them to Burns that afternoon. He was to have delivered them."

"I never saw them. He didn't leave them around."

Bryce banged with his knuckles. He looked quizzically across to Guy.

"Wonder if you could get them? They're no good to Burns."

A row of small, gray cottages, each with five wooden steps leading to the door and each with a dusty six-foot patch of front garden.

In one of these lived Tom Burns. His garden was a yellow marguerite bush.

Guy rang. Footsteps clattered on bare boards. A woman with wispy yellow hair and a frightened look in the eyes answered.

"Oh—you're Mr. Elliott from the factory are you?" The words scarcely were spoken when Tom Burns stepped from the small back room. He looked darker and thinner. The lines about his mouth were like bitter scars.

"What brings you? I thought you'd be dropping around!"

"I wondered if you'd taken the Miller specifications with you the day you left?"

"Left—ha!" He motioned down the hall to the little room from which he had come. "All I took is in there. I don't know what I took. You can look."

Blue prints, papers, T-squares and rules were dumped on a small dark oak table. At the bottom of the pile were the specifications.

Tom Burns stood at Guy's elbow and watched him with a peculiar expectation.

"How is your boy?"

"He's still alive."

"I remember that you said your kid would go crazy over one of those models. I brought this along. It has a spring in it. You can fly it for him."

Tom Burns didn't say a word as Guy took the tiny airplane from the newspaper wrapping. But he led the way to a small back porch where the washtubs were and where a child's crib was crowded into one corner.

A boy about six with gray, brilliant eyes and dark, reddish-blue lips, lay there propped with pillows. He was very pinched about the nostrils—very white.

But he gave an excited laugh and reached out eager wasted hands as his father said, "Look, Tommy! Something for you."

Burns stood and plumped up the pillows. Guy perceived that he was crying.

He called his wife, showed her how to fly the ship and followed Guy to the door.

"I can't get a job. I've only worked three days in the last week. If this keeps on——"

He flung his head back with a jerk. From the back porch came the sound of high rapid laughter. Burns listened. Then he said in a kind of daze and as if talking to himself:

"He could be cured. Gaynor's child was cured. But it took money. They had relatives. Good God—a child can be left to die because people hold onto money. They think it's none of their business. But it is. I tell you, it's everybody's business!

"You well-fed ones think it's none of your business. You think you can build a wall around yourselves and prevent the evils that you stand for from touching you. You can't!

"Good God! That fellow could save him. And he won't."

His wife came out and laid a soothing hand on his arm. "Tom—be quiet. You worry the child."

He brushed her hand off. His face had become livid but he said with that peculiar expectant look:

"I thought Bryce was sending me a message. I thought he was sending me money. He's not going to do it . . ."

He opened the door. Without bidding good-bye, without any further word, he went ahead of Guy down the steps and down the street.

Guy stuck the specifications in his pocket. He watched Burns flinging down the street and again that uneasy apprehension possessed him.

He was responsible—the whole world was responsible because Tom Burns' child was left to die.

Slowly he started the car. Was there more than mere rant in the words? And every wrong permitted is the fault of all? And are all made to pay?

He shook off the oppressive thought. What concern was Tom Burns to him and to the pretty girl standing now on a hilltop waiting? How could his life affect theirs?

He would be late. Miss Pat would stamp her foot and gaily demand "Why?" He turned his car in the direction of the San Mateo hills and went flying along forty miles and more. Get swiftly from the ache and pain . . . get up there in the twilight—in the flowers.

The night after Guy's visit to the home of Tom Burns, he worked late.

It was nearly ten. His drawing was finished. He loitered over it, his hand tangled in his dog's long scruff.

"She likes us, Jim! She's darn sweet!"

He turned suddenly about, hearing or thinking he heard a footstep—a stealthy, hurried footstep.

HALE, COUNTY AGENT OF COOS, TAKES IDAHO JOB

(Associated Press Leased Wire)

MARSHFIELD, Ore., March 12.—Harvey Hale, county agent of Coos county for the past three years, today announced his acceptance of a similar position at Twin Falls, Idaho. He will leave this week to assume his new duties. His successor has not been named.

A general rule to follow in pruning roses is to keep thinning out old wood in favor of new, and pruning back enough to encourage these new shoots.

OFFSET HARROW PUTS EFFICIENCY IN TRACTOR WORK

After many years of experimentation in the construction of farm machinery, manufacturers are now building a very valuable piece of equipment, known as the offset harrow, according to George Hall, representative for Mitchel, Lewis and Staver company. This harrow receives its name because of the peculiar manner in which it is attached to the tractor.

There are many makes offered and purchase of one of these offset harrows, reliably manufactured, is an excellent investment, because in the present day necessity for absolute economy in production, the purchase of suitable machinery is a real investment.

The offset harrow is a tool which fits every need, whether it be turning cover crops for fertilizer, leveling furrows, weed killing, general field work or close work to the trees of the orchard. The offset harrow does each and every one of these jobs in an efficient manner and with a great saving in time. Farmers and orchardists should interest themselves in this new and different tool which does five or six jobs with real economy, Mr. Hall says.

RICHFIELD WINS AGAIN ...and AGAIN!

2 New World's Records with RICHFIELD

ELINOR SMITH, daring 18-year old aviatrix, in a sensational new altitude record for women at Roosevelt Field, N. Y. on March 10th! George W. Haldeman in a new altitude record for commercial planes at Wilmington, Del., on February 28th! Two world's records within two weeks for Richfield motor products!!

Miss Smith climbed to an altitude of between 30,000 and 32,000 feet in her Wright-motored Bellanca monoplane—fighting faintness due to failure of oxygen supply—shattering the old record for women by more than 6,000 feet. She used Richfield Gasoline, Richlube Motor Oil and Richlube Rocker Arm Grease and paid a high tribute to these products at the conclusion of the flight:

"Richfield Gasoline and Richlube Motor Oil functioned perfectly in my record-breaking altitude flight. I always use Richfield products because all tests have proved them to be the best, on the ground and in the air. No little share in my success is due to them."

In establishing a new world's altitude record of 33,500 feet, George Haldeman broke the old record of Martin Jensen by nearly 8,000 feet. Haldeman, too, relied on Richfield to carry his Wright-motored Bellanca monoplane to a new world's record.

Use Richfield products for your own car and find out why the world's great pilots use them exclusively. Fill up at any station with the blue and gold Richfield shield!
