

SOCIETY

Fullerton P. T. A. Elects Mrs. Wells President for Coming Year

The Fullerton P. T. A. held its regular meeting at the schoolhouse on Monday evening. Recitations were given by the children who are to represent the school in the county declamation contest. Further plans were made for the March frolic which is to be held at the school on Friday, March 21st.

The new officers named for the next year were the following: Mrs. Lee Wells, president; Mrs. L. W. Jordan, vice-president; Mrs. Roy Butler, secretary; and Mrs. A. H. Taylor, treasurer.

Daughters of Job Entertained at Brown Home in Laurelwood

Miss Allena Brown entertained the Daughters of Job at her home in Laurelwood on Friday evening with a costume party. The evening was enjoyed playing games, and dancing. Later dainty refreshments were served by Mrs. W. R. Brown. The guests were: Mrs. John Thorne and Mrs. A. J. Young, who assisted, Miss Gene McElhinny of Salem, Miss Rose Newitt, Miss Phyllis Ann Bolter and Miss Cecelia Borchert were guests, and the members were Miss Sabina Nerbas, Miss Patricia Neal, Miss Lois Ann Shipple, Miss Eleanor Fies, Miss Betty Shonaker, Elizabeth Williams, Miss Anna May Urrath, Miss Phyllis Quine, and the hostess, Miss Allena Brown.

Delphin Study Club Meets With Mrs. W. R. Brown

The Delphin Study Club met at the home of Mrs. W. R. Brown on Wednesday afternoon, March 12. The next meeting is to be held at the home of Mrs. Carl Neal.

Woman's Club Will Have American Home Day, March 18th

The Roseburg Woman's club will hold its regular meeting on Tuesday, March 18. In the club rooms at two o'clock in the afternoon. The program for the day will be in charge of Mrs. A. G. Miller, and the subject of discussion is to be "The American Home." Mrs. Charles Helmling will speak on "Music in the Home," and Rev. J. B. Shoun will discuss American homes in general. Mrs. Charles Brand, accompanied by Miss Gladys Strong, will sing and Miss Ida Frank, accompanied by Mrs. Lee Wells, will play a violin solo. The club extends an invitation to all women interested to be present.

Ralph Kuenzli Honored by Birthday Party

Mrs. Ralph Kuenzli entertained at a card party on Wednesday evening at her home on South Pine street, honoring Mr. Kuenzli on his birthday. At a late hour delicious refreshments were served by the hostess.

The guests were Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Kent, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Pickens, Mrs. Pearl Dietrich, Mrs. Jack Chenoweth, Mrs. Hostness, Mr. Kuenzli, and the hostess, Mrs. Kuenzli.

Mr. and Mrs. Ivan Pickens Entertain Supper Club on Friday Evening

Mr. and Mrs. Ivan Pickens entertained the Covered Dish Supper club at the Kohlhaugen apartments on Friday. The supper was served at a large table decorated with Japanese quince, long green taners and green favors to carry out the St. Patrick motif. The guests spent a very pleasant evening playing bridge. Mr. and Mrs. Chester Morgan held high scores. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. John McClintock, Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Thubner, Mr. and Mrs. Chester Morgan, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Kohlhaugen, Dr. and Mrs. C. B. Wade, Mr. and Mrs. David Bulard, Dr. and Mrs. Clair K. Allen, and the host and hostess, Mr. and Mrs. Ivan Pickens.

Mrs. Mathews Hostess to M. O. A. Club in Edenbower

Mrs. Robert Mathews of Edenbower entertained the M. O. A. club on Wednesday. The afternoon was spent in visiting and sewing. Later delicious refreshments were served by the hostess. Those enjoying the afternoon were Mrs. William Cook, Mrs. John Travis, Mrs. John Marks, Mrs. C. B. Calkins, Mrs. Percy Powers, Mrs. Charles Mohr, Mrs. C. W. Tyeon, Mrs. Ward Ellis, Mrs. Harlen Moore, Mrs. Kenneth Cook, Mrs. George Bickle, Mrs. Ralph Hardin, Mrs. Custer, Mrs. Allison, Mrs. Henbott, Miss Pearl Jones and the hostess, Mrs. Robert Mathews.

Catholic Ladies Will Serve Luncheon on St. Patrick's Day, March 17th

The Catholic Ladies are giving a luncheon on St. Patrick's day, March 17, at the Catholic Parish hall on Kane street. The ladies will serve from 11:30 a. m. until 2 p. m. A delicious menu has been planned, and the ladies are eager to have the support of a large number of people.

Sprayco Paint Machine

For sale at bargain. Paints anything inside and out, autos, waterproofing, etc.

SEE JOHN R. KELLY

444 N. Jackson, Phone 466 or Albert Stanley, 507 N. Jackson or 510 Main street.

GURNEY POULTRY RANCH EXPANDED

H. E. Gurney, well known Winchester poultry producer and field man for the Douglas County mill, has substantially expanded his poultry plant.

Mr. Gurney has already secured 3500 baby chicks—2000 from Fred Cockell, Milwaukie, Oregon, and 1500 from L. S. Compton at Drain. The birds in the larger group are now two weeks old and are spry and healthy. Three electric brooders act as mothers for the chicks of this age, while two old burning brooders furnish the needed heat for the 1500 week-old chicks.

To care for the expansion, Mr. Gurney has enlarged his brooding quarters and is completing a new laying house, 90 feet long by 20 feet wide, with a special ventilating system devised by himself.

Wire runs or sun porches, successfully used at the Oregon state agricultural college during the past year, are provided on the south side of each brooder house.

One thousand laying hens are now the chief source of income on the farm, and with good success Mr. Gurney expects to have at least 2500 for fall production.

LOCAL NEWS

From Sutherlin—Miss Lucille Avery of Sutherlin spent the day in Roseburg visiting with friends.

Mrs. Snyder in City—Mrs. J. E. Snyder of Glendale spent yesterday in Roseburg shopping and transacting business.

Visiting From Myrtle Creek—Mr. and Mrs. Jess Bowman of Myrtle Creek were business visitors in Roseburg yesterday.

Canyonville People Here—Mr. and Mrs. John Dubeil of Canyonville spent Friday in Roseburg attending to business affairs.

Portland Couple Here—Mr. and Mrs. George Hall of Portland are spending a few days in Roseburg looking after business affairs.

Gives Flowers to C. of C.—Mr. B. S. Nichols today presented the chamber of commerce with a beautiful bouquet of Japanese quince.

In From Days Creek—Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Moore of Days Creek spent yesterday in Roseburg shopping and attending to business matters.

Will Go to Marshfield—Mrs. Agnes Hahn, stenographer at the Southern Oregon Gas company, will spend the weekend in Marshfield visiting relatives.

Go to Medford—Mr. R. Brown, manager of the Southern Oregon Gas company, accompanied by Mrs. Brown, will drive to Medford tomorrow, on business and to visit.

Here on Business—George C. Sahlin, general manager of the Oregon Caves, and George Edmundson of San Francisco, manager of the Redwood Empire association, were in Roseburg today on business.

Hochradels Here—Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Hochradel, former residents of Roseburg, now located in Seattle, arrived here yesterday for a visit. They were accompanied by Mrs. J. R. Farrington, who has been visiting in Seattle for the past few weeks.

Elects to Honorary—Paul Geddes, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Geddes of this city, and student at Willamette university, was elected to the membership of Pi Gamma Mu, national social science fraternity, recently. Mr. Geddes is a senior at Willamette.

Purchases Property—O. M. DeWitt has purchased one of the residence properties formerly owned by John Goodhue, located on Yale avenue, in West Roseburg. The property was purchased for a home, and the sale was made by G. W. Young and Son, local realtors.

Health Statistics—The state department of health has issued a report on communicable disease in Oregon for the year until March 8, 1930. Of the many counties in Oregon, Douglas was the lowest with only one case of communicable disease, and that was chickenpox. The other counties varied from four to ninety cases.

Mrs. Judd in Portland—Mrs. J. M. Judd and Mrs. C. D. Gordon motored to Portland last Thursday where Mrs. Judd attended a meeting of the University Mothers. Mrs. Judd plans to return to Eugene Sunday where she will visit her daughters, Eldress and Jessie, who are students at the university. She will return to Roseburg the first of the week.

Glide People Here—G. Debernardi, Mr. and Mrs. Pat Lundy and Mrs. Vaughn O'Mara, residents of

DECLAMATIONS ARE HEARD AT DILLARD

DILLARD, March 15.—The Dillard school held its declamation contest Wednesday afternoon. The winner in each division were:

Girls, division I: First prize, Julia Laurance, "The Blue Bird," by E. H. Miller; second, Patricia Miller, "My Shadow," by Robert Louis Stevenson.

Boys, division I: First, Ralph Loomis, "The Boy's Song," by James Hogg; second, Delbert McChlain, "The Little Plant," by Kate Louisa Brown.

Girls, division II: First, Allene Davidson, "The Wreck of the Hesperus," by Longfellow; second, Eunice Rust, "My Shadow," by Stevenson.

Boys, division II: First, Buddie Sharnier, "Always Saying 'Don't,'" by Edgar A. Guest; second, Hayden Laurance, "If Pa Could Have His Way," by Kiser.

Girls, division III: First, Barbara Laurance, "When Johnny's Pa Skates," anonymous; second, Lillian Royer, "All For the Best," by Guest.

Boys, division III: First, Junior Miller, "The Snack in School," by W. P. Palmer; second, Phillip Rummel, "In Flanders Field," by Lieut. Col. John McGraw.

The judges were Mrs. Jess Williams, Mrs. R. B. Montgomery, both of Lookingglass, and Rev. Ira L. Rankin of Dillard.

MYRTLE CREEK FIVE DEFEATS MEDFORD

Myrtle Creek high school, basketball champions of the Douglas county league, defeated Medford high school in a game at Myrtle Creek last night, by a score of 24 to 23. In a preliminary contest Medford's second team beat Myrtle Creek's second team 19 to 18.

These two games were exciting in the extreme. The Medford and Myrtle Creek teams were very evenly matched and the score was tied four times during the contest. Myrtle Creek winning by only one basket in the last minute of play.

In the preliminary game the score was tied at the end of the time. The teams were given an extra period, after a brief rest, and during that period Medford obtained a free throw which netted the needed one point for a victory.

STORY 1 (Continued from page 1)

won from Myrtle Point 29 to 20. Tonight Roseburg will play Myrtle Point for the consolation and Coquille and North Bend will play for the right to represent the district at the state championship tournament in Salem.

STORY 4 (Continued from page 1)

foray into eastern Colorado today after they had robbed the Manton State bank, Manton, Kansas, of approximately $4,000.

At Eads, Colo., the bandits shot and killed Deputy Sheriff Charles Hickman and wounded Bill Mosher, also a deputy sheriff, members of a posse which was searching for the bandit gang. The two officers accused the three bandits in a car which they recognized as that used in the Manton holdup. A gun battle ensued when the three ignored summons to stop.

Successful in their first brush with Colorado officers, the robbers headed northeast, apparently attempting to double back into Kansas by a circuitous route.

The second gun fight occurred at Cheyenne Wells, 40 miles east of Eads where two officers, Sheriff William Cole and Deputy Sheriff George Hollingshead were wounded in an attempt to head them off.

One Thought Wounded LIMON, Colo., March 15.—Finding of a bloodstained car today in the wake of the three robbers who yesterday held up a bank at Manton, Kan., and later killed Deputy Sheriff Charles Hickman at Eads, Colo., in a gun fight, indicated that one of the hunted men, at least was wounded.

Officers here were advised early today that a posse had found an abandoned blood-spattered car near Burlington, Colo., and another abandoned machine near Jetmore, Kansas.

Troops Ordered Out DENVER, March 15.—National guardsmen were ordered into town for the Manton, Kan., bank bandits today when company 157th Infantry, with headquarters at Burlington was assembled.

At the same time a national guard airplane was sent from Denver to make its headquarters at Burlington and aid in the search.

Glide, were business visitors in the city yesterday. Mr. Debernardi, who has a lodging house for North Unquias visitors, reports that there is a great deal of interest being shown in the vacation facilities of the Unquias and he has already made an unusual number of reservations for the season.

MISS PAT

A Story of Romance and High Adventure in Life of Modern Days.
By Elenore Meherin, Author of "Chickie" and Other Famous Serials

CHAPTER 19
William Bryce refused to intercede for Burns. This heightened the unfortunate impression that Burns made. He defied pity. He admitted that he planned the crime for days. He was stubborn, hostile, unrepentant.

"It's all a pose," said Guy. "You can get him off if you ask probation and offer to reinstate him here."

Bryce went white with contempt. "And open the safe and tell him to help himself! Probation! I'll not ask it. I don't want the fellow on the same planet. Did you get the way he looked when I took the stand? Why, he's got murder in his heart. He's raging with it. I'd as soon take a panther into my bed as Tom Burns back into this plant."

"And you steer clear of him. You don't know what you're breeding for yourself. Mark my words and let him alone."

But Guy refused to state that Burns shot at him. He did not see any pistol in the man's hands. He swore to this. Yes, he was treated for a scratch on his neck but he didn't know how he got it. He had not felt the bullet.

"But you heard shots, didn't you? You can be sure of that? And you saw him crawl, and the watchmen have testified, after his pistol when they were closing on him? And he cursed you, didn't he? Got up on his elbow and cursed you?"

Demanding Conviction
The prosecution wanted a conviction. Tom Burns was just a case to them. They wanted to win. Get a conviction and send him across—

The case was going as the prosecution wished. It looked like a long term, possibly life, when a newspaper went out and got a picture of Tom Burns.

Tom told the story of that dizzy crib and his wasted occupation. Tom's wife, against his better protest, was brought into court.

Mrs. Burns crossed her hands. A wisp of yellow hair fell against her cheek. After a moment she brushed it impatiently aside. Her mild blue eyes wandered over the room helplessly, like an animal's that is tied up and beaten. And the animal looks about in pitiful astonishment, wondering where its master can be.

Finally the judge ordered that she be allowed to talk in peace. "Well, he thought Tommy could be cured," she said, turning her large eyes gratefully to the bench. "He thought if I could only get the money to send him to the sanatorium where Joey Gaylor went. He kept thinking about that until he couldn't think of anything else. He had just that one idea. He used to wake up in the night and talk and talk. After a while it got so he couldn't sleep. He'd wake up after an hour and begin to think. He was sick with it. If there was only some way we could scheme or save, if he could earn more. But there wasn't any way."

"And then he fastened on this notion of the $1500. That's what the Gaylor said it cost to cure Joey. He used to stand over Tommy's crib during the coughing fits. He used to stand there and mumble to himself. And the more Tommy failed, the worse the father got."

A Chance to Save Him
"He used to go in a dozen times in the night to look at Tommy. And the day before this happened—all that Friday he kept saying: 'God, he's going to die. I haven't nerve enough to get money and he'll die.' He said this until I could hardly stand it. He was sure that we could save him if we only had the money. He was all wrapped up in him. He asks me all day now where his father is..."

She was drab with that pitiful look in her putty-colored wash gloves, her mild blue eyes and bank yellow hair. But as her voice went on, pictures flled into the room. Tom Burns grew more and more rigid. Some of the women wept.

Even the judge was softened. He said: "I want to free this defendant..."

Burns sat up. He almost smiled. He had a look of wild gratitude—wild relief.

"But a major crime has been committed. We are not justified in robbing, in attempting to kill because illness overtakes our children. In view of all the extenuating circumstances, however, we feel justified in giving a light sentence."

Tom Burns didn't move. Only the blood left his face. It became a dark mask with two lines from his nose to his mouth. He was given one to ten years in San Quentin prison. He was allowed to go under guard and bid farewell to his child.

"Now forget it," William Bryce advised the day after the sentence was passed. "If he hadn't got into this jam, he'd get into another. His type does. And don't miss this—half an inch lower—a tenth of an inch, perhaps, and that bullet would have severed your jugular vein."

He went noisily to his desk, shoved a chair, rustled some papers. "We have lots of business more important than Burns before us..."

He motioned Guy to the chair next him. "Look over these. Nice figures? Well—I put over a lucky deal on that Miller apartment house. We're ready to go ahead. Think we should get the plant working to capacity by September. How do you like that? You can fly high then. Have at the opportunity you want..."

He reached to a vase of flowers, snipped a cornflower and put it in his buttonhole. "By the end of the year, if all goes well, and I will of course, look is the fool's name for the wise man's sagacity or the brave man's daring. So by the end of the year you'll have a neat pile. You can marry that nice little girl I saw you taking into the plane."

Guy went back to his workroom a bit dazzled by the luring prospects William Bryce outlined. He had been waiting two years for this promise to materialize.

Two years ago shortly after the tragic death of Bryce's son, Guy came to the Bryce airplane factory.

The moment was opportune. The father, crushed by the loss, wanted to continue the work the boy had started. He thought it would be a fine tribute to his son—a living monument to perfect a plane—call it after him. So he entered into negotiations with Guy—not him in charge of the established plant, and eternally promised to start on Guy's design immediately.

Many Interests
This was in the beginning when his grief was new, when he regarded as almost sacred the things his son had loved. Under this stress, he had moved his office, march to the life of Nancy Brack, out here to South San Francisco. He had intended to concentrate on plane-building.

But Bryce was too versatile for this. He liked to spread himself out—to cast a dozen dazzling lines. These operations required more and more capital. The production of Guy's plane had been delayed. Now they would really start.

He took a paper and made some figures. And then he recalled spite at random. Bryce's comments on marriage. He would have money enough—without doubt.

He suddenly was feeling Pat's hand pressed to his... a sharp little hand, a bit hard but so warm, so quick and sweet. Right now, thinking of her, he wanted to drive up to that hillside garden; wanted to see her come running down to the gate, swinging it open with such naive joy, every look of gladness that he was elated and sparkling—a young god to her. He loved that, of course, and he was finding it perilously attractive.

About two weeks later Guy went into Bryce's office. "He's left," said Nancy Brack. "In a club. What do you think—those club women who made such a howl when Tom Burns was sent over are working now to have his sentence definitely set at one year... and they're going to get him paroled. He'll be out some time in the first of the year."

Bryce Plays Heavily
"What's that to Bryce?" "Oh—it made him sore. Besides he dropped a hundred thousand yesterday. Pivoting his bank stocks went a little off."

"Is Bryce playing that game heavily?" "That's why I told you to get going strong. Good thing you did."

"Not strong enough if he starts anything like that."

Guy went back to his workroom. Presently he shoved a hand through his hair. If Bryce lost in his gambling, all this beautiful and splendid dream would vanish.

MISS PAT

A Story of Romance and High Adventure in Life of Modern Days.
By Elenore Meherin, Author of "Chickie" and Other Famous Serials

CHAPTER 19
William Bryce refused to intercede for Burns. This heightened the unfortunate impression that Burns made. He defied pity. He admitted that he planned the crime for days. He was stubborn, hostile, unrepentant.

"It's all a pose," said Guy. "You can get him off if you ask probation and offer to reinstate him here."

Bryce went white with contempt. "And open the safe and tell him to help himself! Probation! I'll not ask it. I don't want the fellow on the same planet. Did you get the way he looked when I took the stand? Why, he's got murder in his heart. He's raging with it. I'd as soon take a panther into my bed as Tom Burns back into this plant."

"And you steer clear of him. You don't know what you're breeding for yourself. Mark my words and let him alone."

But Guy refused to state that Burns shot at him. He did not see any pistol in the man's hands. He swore to this. Yes, he was treated for a scratch on his neck but he didn't know how he got it. He had not felt the bullet.

"But you heard shots, didn't you? You can be sure of that? And you saw him crawl, and the watchmen have testified, after his pistol when they were closing on him? And he cursed you, didn't he? Got up on his elbow and cursed you?"

Demanding Conviction
The prosecution wanted a conviction. Tom Burns was just a case to them. They wanted to win. Get a conviction and send him across—

The case was going as the prosecution wished. It looked like a long term, possibly life, when a newspaper went out and got a picture of Tom Burns.

Tom told the story of that dizzy crib and his wasted occupation. Tom's wife, against his better protest, was brought into court.

Mrs. Burns crossed her hands. A wisp of yellow hair fell against her cheek. After a moment she brushed it impatiently aside. Her mild blue eyes wandered over the room helplessly, like an animal's that is tied up and beaten. And the animal looks about in pitiful astonishment, wondering where its master can be.

Finally the judge ordered that she be allowed to talk in peace. "Well, he thought Tommy could be cured," she said, turning her large eyes gratefully to the bench. "He thought if I could only get the money to send him to the sanatorium where Joey Gaylor went. He kept thinking about that until he couldn't think of anything else. He had just that one idea. He used to wake up in the night and talk and talk. After a while it got so he couldn't sleep. He'd wake up after an hour and begin to think. He was sick with it. If there was only some way we could scheme or save, if he could earn more. But there wasn't any way."

"And then he fastened on this notion of the $1500. That's what the Gaylor said it cost to cure Joey. He used to stand over Tommy's crib during the coughing fits. He used to stand there and mumble to himself. And the more Tommy failed, the worse the father got."

A Chance to Save Him
"He used to go in a dozen times in the night to look at Tommy. And the day before this happened—all that Friday he kept saying: 'God, he's going to die. I haven't nerve enough to get money and he'll die.' He said this until I could hardly stand it. He was sure that we could save him if we only had the money. He was all wrapped up in him. He asks me all day now where his father is..."

She was drab with that pitiful look in her putty-colored wash gloves, her mild blue eyes and bank yellow hair. But as her voice went on, pictures flled into the room. Tom Burns grew more and more rigid. Some of the women wept.

Even the judge was softened. He said: "I want to free this defendant..."

Burns sat up. He almost smiled. He had a look of wild gratitude—wild relief.

"But a major crime has been committed. We are not justified in robbing, in attempting to kill because illness overtakes our children. In view of all the extenuating circumstances, however, we feel justified in giving a light sentence."

Tom Burns didn't move. Only the blood left his face. It became a dark mask with two lines from his nose to his mouth. He was given one to ten years in San Quentin prison. He was allowed to go under guard and bid farewell to his child.

"Now forget it," William Bryce advised the day after the sentence was passed. "If he hadn't got into this jam, he'd get into another. His type does. And don't miss this—half an inch lower—a tenth of an inch, perhaps, and that bullet would have severed your jugular vein."

He went noisily to his desk, shoved a chair, rustled some papers. "We have lots of business more important than Burns before us..."

He motioned Guy to the chair next him. "Look over these. Nice figures? Well—I put over a lucky deal on that Miller apartment house. We're ready to go ahead. Think we should get the plant working to capacity by September. How do you like that? You can fly high then. Have at the opportunity you want..."

He reached to a vase of flowers, snipped a cornflower and put it in his buttonhole. "By the end of the year, if all goes well, and I will of course, look is the fool's name for the wise man's sagacity or the brave man's daring. So by the end of the year you'll have a neat pile. You can marry that nice little girl I saw you taking into the plane."

Guy went back to his workroom a bit dazzled by the luring prospects William Bryce outlined. He had been waiting two years for this promise to materialize.

Two years ago shortly after the tragic death of Bryce's son, Guy came to the Bryce airplane factory.

The moment was opportune. The father, crushed by the loss, wanted to continue the work the boy had started. He thought it would be a fine tribute to his son—a living monument to perfect a plane—call it after him. So he entered into negotiations with Guy—not him in charge of the established plant, and eternally promised to start on Guy's design immediately.

Many Interests
This was in the beginning when his grief was new, when he regarded as almost sacred the things his son had loved. Under this stress, he had moved his office, march to the life of Nancy Brack, out here to South San Francisco. He had intended to concentrate on plane-building.

But Bryce was too versatile for this. He liked to spread himself out—to cast a dozen dazzling lines. These operations required more and more capital. The production of Guy's plane had been delayed. Now they would really start.

He took a paper and made some figures. And then he recalled spite at random. Bryce's comments on marriage. He would have money enough—without doubt.

He suddenly was feeling Pat's hand pressed to his... a sharp little hand, a bit hard but so warm, so quick and sweet. Right now, thinking of her, he wanted to drive up to that hillside garden; wanted to see her come running down to the gate, swinging it open with such naive joy, every look of gladness that he was elated and sparkling—a young god to her. He loved that, of course, and he was finding it perilously attractive.

About two weeks later Guy went into Bryce's office. "He's left," said Nancy Brack. "In a club. What do you think—those club women who made such a howl when Tom Burns was sent over are working now to have his sentence definitely set at one year... and they're going to get him paroled. He'll be out some time in the first of the year."

Bryce Plays Heavily
"What's that to Bryce?" "Oh—it made him sore. Besides he dropped a hundred thousand yesterday. Pivoting his bank stocks went a little off."

"Is Bryce playing that game heavily?" "That's why I told you to get going strong. Good thing you did."

"Not strong enough if he starts anything like that."

Guy went back to his workroom. Presently he shoved a hand through his hair. If Bryce lost in his gambling, all this beautiful and splendid dream would vanish.

CEDAR SHINGLES

BUY NOW

The best grades at lowest prices.

Now is the time to buy them.

DENN-GERRETSEN CO., INC.

LOW COSTS

13½ cents a dozen feed cost for eggs on Crown Feeds, FOR A YEAR, not for one or two months.

Crown costs more per sack, but less per egg.

SPECIAL