Unmannerly Go-Getters Are Losing Caste—Wrong System Taught Men and Women Entering Business, Writer Declares.

Modern business fiction in which the boy, the happy go-getter, plays the leading role, has had a bad influence upon young men and women entering or about to enter upon business careers. At least that is the opinion of Fred R. Barton, in an article, "Give Us Sanity and Less Inspiration," in Nation's Business.

"We've taught our young fellow, through success stories and inspirational articles," he says "never to take 'No' for an answer. We've convinced them that the Man Who Gets There is the man who has no obstacles and climbs porches to gain a first-hand audience with the Big man-at-the-Top."

"As a result we have produced a breed of ill-mannered go-getters who have the crust of traffic cops and the assurance of hell captains. The only merit they know is aggressiveness. But humility, modesty, reserve, caution, diplomacy, common sense—all these virtues are ignored."

"The modern go-getter is a counterpart of the old-time insurance agent who had no quality but plenty of persistence. How many years they retarded the growth of insurance no man knows. But certainly these well-meaning incompetents who seized every opportunity to buttonhole you and talk up insurance drove a man into a corner and built up a resistance against insurance methods which was years dying out."

"There has evolved today a type of insurance man who holds enough confidence in his merchandise to feel certain that people will buy it. Moreover, he knows that when insurance is over sold it does not stay sold; that many a policy purchased by a tired listener is canceled after a few payments."

"But the great fund of go-getter literature makes no suggestion about respecting a man's privacy. Never in works telling how young Alcindor got to the top do you read a mention of how he waited till tomorrow to see a man at his office, rather than corner him in the showerbath of the golf club."

"All our literature has gone to build up a race of go-getters. And now heaven itself can't protect us from them."
