Sale of Jump Off Joe's Domain in Josephine Recalls Mortal Combat of Indian Chief and Pico the Buck

GRANTS PASS, Ore., April 24.—It was only a legal notice such as the United States government posts when it is necessary to sell government property.

It occupied only an ordinary position on the bulletin board in the Grants Pass post office.

But its presence revived the memories of a tragedy and murder that snuffed out the life of one of the most famous Indian chiefs ever to inhabit the call of the Rogue river wild turkey.

The bulletin said the government would sell on a certain date a certain piece of property, but to old timers, those grizzled veterans of "sour dough" days, it revealed that the old stamping grounds of Chief Jump Off Joe was about to revert to the whites, after technically being held in the name of the Indian since 1855.

Chief Jump Off Joe, according to the stories which have been handed down from the days when the call of gold was rampant, was a character among the Indians and whites. On many occasions the unusual physical powers and the cunning of the chief made him victor in deadly combat.

Both Combatants Die

It was on the small plot of land lying 17 miles from Grants Pass, that the chief met a man who, if not his master, was his equal. It was in the gathering gloom of a murky November night that Chief Jump Off Joe met an Indian buck named Pico met in verbal clash.

For an hour, it is said the men framed through the woods until they arrived at a piece of land again about to be bought by white gold. Here the battle of death started. Stripped of their scant garments the two Indians, in the presence of a group of friends, battled. Nothing but brute force was used. Nothing but the craftiness of the clan was applied. Midnight came and the men battled on, kory, heavy, but still fighting with a fierce determination. Friends from the campfire sought to intervene but to no avail. It was a battle to death with no quarter.

When the grey dawn crept into the narrow walls of the canyon now known as Jump Off Joe creek all was quiet. The fight was over. Death had won. Jump Off Joe and Pico were both dead. Their torn bodies were deserted by the warriors under a strange superstition that it was unwise to touch that which death had apparently held sacred as its own.

Indians Shun Plot

From that day to this so far as has been known, no Indian ever spent a night on the plot of land. It had previously been set aside by the government for Chief Jump Off Joe because of his repeated acts of friendship for the whites.

The Indians claim that on every murky night when the moon is in the last quarter the death struggle of Jump Off Joe and Pico can be heard from the fir wrapped hills adjoining the creek. It is because of this strange superstition that none of the relatives of the dead chief ever claimed the land.

Attractions AT THE MOVIES

ANTLERS—Today and Saturday, "Illusion," with Buddy Rogers and Nancy Carroll, all-talking, dancing, singing.

LIBERTY—Today and Saturday, "Temple Tower," all-talking.

By G. C. ARR

IT'S TOO bad the producers didn't pick a better name for "Illusion" in which Nancy Carroll and Buddy Rogers are now playing at the Antlers theatre. The play is much better than its name.

As would be expected when two actors as good as Nancy and Buddy are co-starred, this latest talkie, produced by Paramount, is an unusual show. It's a true to life production which isn't overdone in any one particular.

The story concerns a young vaudeville team whose success is barred by the ambitions of the man to break away from the stage and into society. His little partner (Nancy) wants to keep the team together and also wants to keep Buddy's love. The struggle against odds which she has and the dramatic ending go to make up an intensely interesting story.

There is just enough music to give proper balance to the presentation. Although they didn't need much help from the remainder of the cast to make the show a success the stars are well supported. In this reviewer's opinion "Illusion" is a better picture than "Close Harmony." And that's saying a lot. The picture shows again tonight and Saturday.
