POEM FOR THE DAY

By LOUIS ALBERT BANKS

WISE SELF CONTROL
Former President Calvin Coolidge, in a copyright article in the May issue of Hearst's International and Cosmopolitan writes that he has no intention of returning to public life.
The former president gives his views on problem, the tariff, playing the market, the suggestion that he run for senator, the talk of another term and "minding one's own business."
"When I left Washington I left public office," Mr.
Coolidge says. "It is an incomprehensible relief and I have no intention of returning to it."
"If I were in the senate," he adds, "it would be agreeable to many of my colleagues, and with all my desire to be helpful it would probably sometimes be an embarrassment to the administration. To have a former president in Washington exercising political power would result in all kinds of uncomfortable complications. Only the necessity of serving in some national crisis, so great as to subordinate all other considerations, would warrant it."
"Nor," he says further, "do I have any sympathy with those who are discussing again making me president. The service that I could give to the people in that office I feel is done.—As associated Press story April 10, 1930.

When have we grown a man so sane
With common sense so simple, plain;
Who never speaks until he's ready,
Is always earnest, quiet, steady?
He never talks to make a noise,
Is always calm and keeps his poise.
But if he "choose" to say the word,
His gentlest utterance is heard.

He's climbed the ladder—state and nation.
Made good in every single station;
He'll not retrace an old worn trail;
His reputation's not for sale.
He'll go ahead with steady nerve,
Will lose no honest chance to serve,
Will keep stronghold on common sense,
And think of life in future tense.

He's tasted all the joys of place—
Presided there with tact and grace;
He's told his tale in language plain,
Has seen his reputation gain.
Has won his countrymen's respect;
He stands among our proved elect.
No office could increase his fame,
Or twine new laurels round his name.

Plain Calvin Coolidge, sane and wise,
Grows larger in the people's eyes,
Is big enough to lay aside
The draperies of pomp and pride.
Like men about whom Plutarch talks
He 'cross the page of history stalks.
How well he fits his place and time—
This man with common sense, sublime.
