Geo. Wingfield, Only Millionaire in Nevada, Began on $50 'Stake'

RENO, Nev., May 27.—(A. P.)—Successively cowboy, miner, "boom town" banker and hotel owner, George Wingfield, whose fortune grew from a $50 "grub stake," is now credited with being the only millionaire in the only state which has only one.

Nevada's lone seven-figured capitalist is president of 20 banks, operates a chain of hotels, owns a number of mineral properties and possesses agricultural interests.

Wingfield represents his state as republican national committeeman, is a regent of the state university and maintains the only racing stables in the state.

Twenty-five years ago he was a cowboy in southeastern Oregon.

The late Senator George P. Nixon, Winnemucca banker put up the $50 which became the foundation of Wingfield's wealth.

It was a profitable investment for the senator, for young Wingfield, with a flair for business, eventually acquired control of the flourishing Goldfield Consolidated mine. He declared Nixon on the deal and they are reputed to have divided $30,000,000 in profits.

Preferring to remain in the background, Wingfield has declined a United States senatorship.

When defalcations of $516,000 were discovered in the state treasury in 1927, Wingfield deposited a personal check for that amount in his Carson Valley bank, a state fund-depository, as a loan to avert financial embarrassment to Nevada and possible unfavorable reaction on business and industry.

Poets' Corner

IN MEMORY OF C. G. FORRESTER

(From impressions gained during certain pleasant hours spent in his home.)

By W. TAYLOR COOPER
His was but a humble home, standing out at the edge of town.

And near by was a brook, that from the hills came wandering down.

Here he came when wanting strength bide him cease from toil and strife.

To tarry until the latter years came off the Loom of Life.

His failing form we liken now, to a ship once staunch and sound;

Which, after plowing through stormy seas, had quiet waters found.

There, waiting the Captain's orders to sail to that distant clime,

The Haven of Rest that lies beyond the outer ports of Time.

He'd unfold sometimes a page of his life, rich in travel lore,

For he had wandered far and wide, at home and on foreign shore.

As he talked, we journeyed with him, and borne on the passing breeze,

We sensed the odor of mountain pine and tang of Southern Seas.

No boastful spirit prevailed; he held his life but commonplace.

As with all, some things recorded, he would that he might efface.

Just seeking in his humble way to follow the Master's plan.

With a bright and hopeful outlook, faith in God and fellow man.

One morn when all the earth was garbed in the rich hues of May,

A neighbor calling, found that he had quietly slipped away.

Silence now broods around the place where the little cottage stands.

Our friend has moved to a fairer home, a home not built by hands.
