MAYOR OF DETROIT FAILS IN ATTEMPT TO BLOCK RECALL

(Associated Press Leased Wire) DETROIT, July 1.—Circuit Judge Arthur Webster today refused Mayor Charles Bowles and his supporters an injunction restraining the city clerk from acting on petitions demanding the mayor's recall. In his decision Judge Webster stated that he had no right to interfere with the election because "it involves questions wholly of a political nature." The judge also stated that "it is of vital importance that the questions involved in this litigation should be speedily disposed of and through the cooperation of counsel on both sides the case is now in a position where it can be quickly brought before the supreme court." It was announced the case would be taken to the supreme court immediately. Five months in the city hall during which the mayor clashed repeatedly with his council, his commissioners and two of the city's leading newspapers came to a climax May 21 when a group of citizens started circulating petitions for his recall. The movement followed the mayor's discharge of Police Commissioner Harold H. Emmons and appointment of Thomas C. Wilcox, former department of justice man, in his stead. Just before the storm broke Mayor Bowles went to the Kentucky derby. In his absence Commissioner Emmons and his men swooped down on handbooks and policy houses and arrested more than 200 persons. Returning, the mayor fired his commissioner and charged the raids were made to discredit his administration.

POEM FOR THE DAY

By LOUIS ALBERT BANKS

A UNIVERSAL FAVORITE RETURNS

When the movies were only a flicker, and stage stars twinkled with a far-flung radiance in a world not yet grown naughty, one star among them all glowed with peculiar, lovely light and shot its beams fair into the hearts of her countrymen and her countrywomen alike, high and low, young and old, confessing foolishness or pretending wisdom. The name of the star was Maude Adams. It swung high in the heavens, and the brightest in the decade called Maude, and the new-century decade after that, for then the other name of the star was, first, Lady Babble of "The Little Minister," and second, Peter Pan of the Never-Never Land—and always some of the magic of its light was borrowed from Barrie.

Since 1916, when, softly shining in "A Kiss for Cinderella," the star dipped behind a horizon black with clouds of war overshadowing the world—since then the public has seen no glimmer of those beams that used to lay upon it so special a spell of romance. Maude Adams has shunned the footlights all that time—fourteen long years—though they are the lights into which she was almost literally born, and though her first actual stage appearance was at the age of 1 when she was brought upon the mimic scene cradled on a platter. . . .

Naturally, a certain curiosity greets the announcement that Miss Adams is about to return to the stage—not by way of directing pictures, but in her own person upon the boards once so familiar with her footsteps. The star that has been below the horizon so many years is to appear again and shine once more in "romantic comedy" as of old. It is to be "modern" romantic comedy, however, we are informed. The Barrie heroine of the legend that has held on so tenaciously while Miss Adams herself has been invisible, will become the heroine of a piece by "a well known American playwright" as yet unnamed.—H. I. Brock in the New York Times, May 25, 1930.

Maude Adams has that gracious art That wins the universal heart; No matter what the role she plays, She wins from us our hearty praise. The heroine she incarnates, Will show so many lovely traits, That she is always sure to win Since all her hearers feel she's kin.

Her sweet and gracious womanhood Is so delicious, pure, and good, She captures every normal soul And, from the listener, takes her toll. Her voice, so like an angel's flute, Makes every ear a new recruit, And strangers to that mellow tone Become at once Maude Adams' own.

She is the sweetheart of the mass, Beloved of every clan and class; She is the friend of youth and age; She sweetens childhood, cheers the sage. She has a magic, wondrous gift That all men's worries seems to lift; Has something in her sparkling eye That brings the splendor of the sky. We're glad she's come again to play, Too long, too long, she's been away! Broadcast the news upon the air—"Twill brighten up a world of care!" Maude Adams comes again to reign, To sweeten joy, assuage our pain! She'll spread a fragrant atmosphere; Through all the land 'twill bring good cheer.

Betterment. That is the watchword of American progress. As a nation we are not content to stand still. We want better foods, we want newer and better ways of doing things, labor-saving devices, short-cuts. We want more comforts and luxuries for our homes. We want better automobiles at lower costs. We want better houses, better means of transportation. We want to dress better and to play and enjoy ourselves more.

Progress is reflected by the advertising found in the newspapers. It is through advertising that we first learn of the newest in merchandise, the newest methods, the newest of everything. Advertising is the sign of progress and often the source of it.
