POEM FOR THE DAY

By LOUIS ALBERT BANKS

THE STORY OF THE VOICES

An expedition sent to "darkest Africa" from Chicago has come back not boasting the usual strange animal prizes, but bringing as its rarest treasure 50 diciaphone records.

These records standing on a shelf in an office at the Field Museum of Natural History look like any ordinary business office collection ready to repeat to waiting stenographers, "Yours of the 10th received and contents noted." But when they are made to speak for the first time in Chicago they will reproduce sounds never before heard on this continent, according to Wilfrid D. Hambly, leader of the Field Museum Expedition to West Africa, which was sponsored by Frederick H. Rawson of Chicago.

The beating of drums in a village ceremony in Angola, below the equator; native Ovimbundu negro children singing at their games; tales of primitive tribes told in their peculiar tongue, the Mbundu, will sound from the cylinders. For Mr. Hambly, who traveled some 10,000 miles in a Ford truck, accompanied by a few native aides collected dialects and songs and folklore as diligently as he gathered objects.

He didn't neglect the latter, either. There's a big roomful of them at the Field Museum—so many it will take Mr. Hambly, who is curator of African ethnology for the institution, at least a year to study and classify them all. But people have brought home pottery and masks before, whereas bringing home voices is rather a novelty.

They were not so easy to get. Anyone who has tried to take photographs of primitive peoples knows they are camera-shy. The thought of having their voices trapped is even less appealing to them, the leader of the expedition said. The natives he met were far from eager to "go into the talkies," even of this rather conservative kind, but Mr. Hambly found ways of convincing them that the dictaphone was harmless and now he has the permanent records.—News story from Chicago, 1930.

This gathering voices far away
To hold forever and a day,
That we may study all their tones
Just as we study plants and stones,
Has stirred my mind to ponder, dream
This fanciful poetic theme—
The magic power that's in the voice
To make us fear or else rejoice.

There is the voice of human love
That falls like music from above,
The tone of gracious sympathy
Like breeze from off the summer sea.
We hear it in the lullaby.
That soothes the startled baby's cry;
The same in Africa's jungle wild
As where the city's wealth is piled.

Then there is anger's grating sound—
How much the same the world around!
The muttering cry of rising hate
As grim and merciless as fate;
It feeds a poison to the blood,
Brings evil's vicious thoughts to bud,
Sends through the nerves a wicked thrill,
And stirs the soul to hurt and kill.

The songs of childhood when at play—
So innocent—with laughter gay.
'Mong every color, tribe and race
Work miracles of happy grace.
Wise Wilfrid Hambly's dictaphones
Have caught for us these varied tones.
And, onward through the passing years.
They'll wake men's healts to smiles or tears.
