POEM FOR THE DAY

By LOUIS ALBERT BANKS

MacDONALD PROVES HIMSELF

The signing of the naval treaty, for which Ramsay MacDonald, the British premier, gets a fair share of credit, and the passing of a budget imposing new taxation upon the British people give one an opportunity of summing up the record of the British labor government.

Before the election which brought this new government into power—though power strictly limited by any combination against it between conservatives and liberals—I prophesied in the New York Times magazine that if labor should be returned there would be no danger of any revolutionary action by Mr. MacDonald and his colleagues and that they would be as traditional in their methods as their political opponents. This has now been fully proved, although the increase of taxation is continuing a process by which the social conditions of Great Britain are being radically changed.

Ramsay MacDonald himself is steadily building up a reputation, which already marks him out as one of Britain's most remarkable prime ministers in the long history of the country. He has succeeded in living down the intense unpopularity—to put it mildly—which came to him because of his pacifist attitude during the war and the deep suspicion in the minds of his political enemies that he was unpatriotic in secret collusion with bolshevism and a dangerous demagogue who would undermine the foundations of British security and social structure. Now even the conservatives are satisfied that he is no more pernicious than any one who is not a conservative, and many of them, including Mr. Stanley Baldwin, whom he succeeded in the premiership, admit him and respect him not only for recent acts of statesmanship but for personal qualities of an attractive and even endearing kind—Sir Philip Gibbs in the New York Times, June 3, 1930.

MacDonald now has stood the test. Has kept his head and kept his zeal; He's dared to deal with mighty things From which the stream of history springs; He's dared the role of pioneer And marched right on with radiant cheer; He's stalked across the world's front page And faced the problems of his age.

He's won respect from all his foes. Has sought to soothe his country's woes; He's held the hand of friendship out To all the world around, about; He's held old England in her place, But guided with a courteous grace; He's quite disproved his critics' sneers, And often won their gallant cheers.

MacDonald has a poet soul— He's played a great romantic role; He's never catered to his fear— His is a picturesque career; He did not win his present job By bowing low before the mob; He has the pluck to challenge fate— 'Tis that which makes MacDonald great.

He's now a part of Britain's story, Will share in all her future glory; He's stilled the cry of false alarm, Has shown the world MacDonald charm And twined such laurels round his name They guarantee undying fame. He stands among a group select, Whom history's tales can ne'er neglect.
