POEM FOR THE DAY

By LOUIS ALBERT BANKS

THE GLORY OF THE REPORTER

Russell Owen's name will be perpetuated in the future histories of Journalism in America alongside of that other reporter who covered an assignment comparable to his in time and space.

Sixty years ago James Gordon Bennett, editor of the New York Herald, called a young reporter into his office and said:

"Stanley, I want you to go to Africa and find Dr. Livingstone."

Livingstone, the great Scotch missionary explorer, was lost somewhere in the interior of Africa. For a year the press of the whole world had been thrilled with rumors and speculation as to the fate of the venerable clergyman. But nobody did anything about it until the enterprising editor of the enterprising newspaper sensed the news value inherent in the situation and sent its own reporter on an assignment, novel not only as to distance and probable time required, but also as to cost.

Henry M. Stanley's achievement in penetrating to the heart of Africa on Dr. Livingstone's trail, and his success are history.

Russell Owen's achievement is still news, and we are going to hear tonight from his own lips how he covered an assignment which took him even further from civilization than Stanley's did. He went literally to the ends of the earth with Admiral Byrd. He went prepared to report either disaster or success, which ever fate might have in store for the gallant expedition. Like Stanley, he took the risk that he might never come back. He faced hardships and exposure as serious in their way as any which Stanley faced in the Congo.

And he covered the assignment like the great reporter that he is.
—From the speech of Kent Cooper at the Russell Owen banquet in New York, June, 1930.

Reporters ply a noble art
That takes its toll of mind and heart;
To see the world with honest eyes
Then blazon facts upon the skies,
To hear all sounds with honest ears
Then tell the truth in spite of fears,
Demand the highest type of man
Built on a fine heroic plan.

To judge a deed's dramatic worth
When carried clear across the earth—
Judge its reaction on the brain,
Know what will others entertain,
Requires a certain grasp of mind
Men often search afar to find,
But Russell Owen stood the test
Throughout that long Antarctic quest.

He kept the whole wide world alert
To listen to his tales expert:
We shivered at each wide crevasse
Exploring teams were made to pass;
We swelled with pride o'er mountain tales,
And gloried in Amundsen's trails;
We even heard the puppies bark
When frightened in the polar dark.

We flew with Byrd right o'er the pole,
Rejoicing he had reached his goal.
Yes, Russell Owen proved his skill—
He gave the world full many a thrill;
He utterly effaced himself,
And, like a wise reporting elf,
He made the polar world so clear
It gave mankind romantic cheer.
