FISH DRAGS JAP TO DEATH IN BAY

(Associated Press Leased Wire) TAMPA, Fla., Aug. 5.—The story of a death struggle between a Japanese seaman and a giant fish that dragged him into deep water and drowned him at Port Tampa was related today by port authorities. Kimoto Toona, 25, arrived on the freighter Lisbon Maru July 18 and began spearing fish from a small boat. He fastened the end of his rope around his body when he sighted a few fish and sent the spear into its tail. Dashing out into the bay, the fish dragged the seaman under before he could release the rope. Searchers who found the body the next day said the fish still was on the rope.

CULLING HENS IS SAID PROFITABLE

In a period of low prices for eggs the poultryman has particular need to cull low-producing hens, because in such a period fewer hens will pay their way and also earn a profit than in more prosperous times. Cull hens are frequent visitors at the feed hopper, and the poultryman who markets these loafers as they begin to molt, or who culls his flock closely and systematically, stands a better chance of making a profit from his flock, say poultry specialists of the U. S. department of agriculture.

The time of molt is an indication of the ability to lay eggs. Hens that molt before September are usually low producers. Those that do not molt until late in September or October are usually high producers. Hens that molt as late as October or November produce nearly 100 per cent more winter eggs and 50 per cent more eggs for the entire year, than hens that molt in July. The poultryman who observes the molt as a guide to culling may turn a liability into an asset by marketing or eating the early molters as they show signs of going off production. These surplus hens may be marketed over a longer period and will usually bring more money than if all the cull hens are sold late in the fall.

Flocks that make the best profits for their owners consist of hens from good breeding stock that has been selected for late molting. Elimination of early molters, therefore, is a method of retaining the best hens for next year's breeding flock. Care and management also affect the time of molting. Anything that stops egg production, such as moving the flock from one house to another, or improper feeding, tends to bring on the molt. A constant supply of mash, scratch and green feed, and clean quarters, fresh water, and shade, help to keep the flock in good condition.

Another method of culling the poor layers is to note the physical condition of the birds. A good layer is vigorous in midsummer and has a plump bright comb which appears to be full of blood and is waxy and soft in texture. The wattles and comb of a poor layer at this time of year are shrunken and comparatively hard, and the color of the legs and beak of a good layer is bleached or faded, whereas both the legs and beak of a hen that has stopped laying begin to show a rich yellow color. In a good layer the subic bones, which are on each side of the vent, are flexible in any season, but in a poor producer they are thick and rigid. The use of one or both of these methods of culling the flock helps to reduce the feed cost and makes little, if any, difference in the egg production.

TRAFFIC SHAKEUP ADMITTED BY HOSS

(Associated Press Leased Wire) SALEM, Ore., Aug. 5.—Confirmation of reports that T. A. Rafferty, chief of the state traffic department, would be removed from his post was received last night from Hal E. Hoss, secretary of state. Hoss was reached by telephone at his beach home at Taft.

"When Rafferty's resignation becomes effective," he said, "I will have to mind the man who will be appointed as his successor. It will not be Captain Joseph J. McMahon, as indicated in published reports."

At the same time Hoss denied he contemplated removing from the traffic force Sergeant W. H. Ellonberg, stationed at Eugene, or Lieutenant O. O. Nichols, now at Medford. On the other hand he would not discuss the status of Captain Kenneth Bloom who, reports indicated, was to be removed.

Although Hoss would make no comment on the situation, state house circles believed discussion within the ranks of the traffic force, coupled with what they termed "talk-bearing," was responsible for the removal. Rafferty, it is understood, will leave the service October 1.

Letters requesting the resignation of the men slated to go were mailed by Hoss a few hours before he left for his vacation at Taft. State house employes said they believed some of the men were given an opportunity for a personal interview.

Hoss said yesterday he would make a statement on his return to Salem next week.

ANTLERS—Today, Wednesday, Thursday, "Paramount on Parade," 60 Paramount stars; Friday and Saturday, Ramon Novarro in "In Gay Madrid."

A WORLD of entertainment will be spread before patrons of the Antlers theatre today where "Paramount on Parade," the long awaited and joyously anticipated festival of the stars opens its three-day enjoyment visit. It's a great party and everybody's invited.

More than thirty-five stars and featured players of the Paramount studios join in the glamorous, breathtaking entertainment revel. The picture was five months in the making and, during that time, the greatest secrecy surrounded it. When it was first shown in Hollywood, a delighted audience roared and roared and hummed and thoroughly enjoyed themselves watching it.

"Paramount on Parade" is thrilling, gorgeous, spectacular, funny, exciting, exquisite, tuneful and every other adjective in the language. The most famous screen stars, George Bancroft, Clara Bow, Maurice Chevalier, Nancy Carroll, and many others, do their stuff. There is fun from Harry Green, Jack Oakie, Sweets Gallagher and Helen Kane; songs and dancing from Nancy Carroll and Clara Bow; Charles (Buddy) Rogers makes love; Ruth Chatterton does a dramatic bit that's probably the best thing she has ever done on stage or screen. Richard Arlen, Gary Cooper, Kay Francis, Fredric March, Lillian Roth and Fay Wray, and all the other young and handsome and beautiful highlights of Paramount pictures contribute their best.

And everything is surrounded with a glamorous, glorious aura of songs, music, beautiful chorus girls, gorgeous settings. Many of the scenes are in technicolor. Broadway's famous music ensemble, Abe Lyman and his band, furnishes some of the music. Everything's on the up and up. There's going to be a real party at the Antlers theatre tonight, tomorrow and Thursday. Everybody's invited.
