

The SEA BRIDE

By BEN AMES WILLIAMS

CHAPTER XXVIII

"Dan! have you noticed the way Faith looks?" Brander's boy asked abruptly.

"Dan! had been half prepared for the question; nevertheless his fingers dug into his palms. He remained silent for a moment, thinking. His thoughts raced. His eyes fell on faithless Slatter at the wheel. There was a piece of luck and instrument ready to his hand.

"Dan! still hesitated for a space; his brows twisting. Then the man threw all decency behind him, and flung himself at last into the path toward which his feet had been tending. He moved to one side, so that Roy, in facing him, must also face the man at the wheel; so that Roy's words would come to Slatter's ears. And Dan! was very sure that Slatter would take care to hear.

For another moment he did not speak; then he laughed harshly.

"What do you mean, Roy?" he asked.

"I mean the way Faith looks at Brander all the time," Roy repeated.

Dan! Toney seemed to be embarrassed; he looked to right and left, and he said huskily:

"Shucks! I guess you've got too much imagination, Roy."

Roy shook his head.

"No, I haven't, either. I've been watching her. She looks at him and her eyes get kind of misty like; and if you say something to her, sometimes she doesn't hear you at all."

"She's got a right to think," Dan! chuckled. "You talk too much anyway, Roy. No wonder she don't listen to you."

His tone was good-natured. Roy fell silent for a moment, studying Dan!'s face; and Dan! looked confused.

"Dan!" Roy said sharply. "Haven't you seen yourself, what I mean? Haven't you, Dan!?"

Dan! turned his head away; he would not meet Roy's eyes.

"I know you mean it," Roy cried. "Everybody must see it!"

"Roy, you'd best not see too much," Dan! said sternly. "It don't pay. There's times when it's wise to see little and say nothing. If it was me, I'd say this was one of the times."

"That's all right," Roy admitted. "But I can talk to you, Dan! Noll Wing is too old for Faith. She ought to have married you, Dan!"

Children have a disconcerting way of sticking a word like a knife into our secret hearts; they see so clearly and they have not yet learned to pretend they do not see. Roy, for all his eighteen years, was still as much child as man; and Dan! winced.

"Land, Roy!" he protested. "Get that idea out of your head. Faith and me understand each other."

Roy turned his back, looking aft. Dan! glanced toward Slatter at the wheel. Slatter's back was toward them; but Dan! could have sworn the man's ears were visibly pricking to miss no word. Dan!'s eyes burned unpleasantly.

A woman's earnest armor is her innocence. If Faith were tarred in the eyes of the men in the fo'c'sle, she would have few defenders there. The roughest man will honor a good woman; but he looks upon one who is soiled with contemptuous and sneering eyes. Dan! was willing, for his own ends, that the fo'c'sle should think evil of Faith Wing.

While they stood thus, Brander came on deck, and spoke for a minute with Dan!, then went aloft forward. Because he and Dan! clashed so sharply, Brander had fallen into the way of spending much time amidships with the harpooners, or forward with the crew. Dan!'s place was aft. Roy watched Brander as he spoke to the mate, watched him walk away. When Brander was gone, Dan! looked toward Roy.

"Dan!", Roy said quietly. "If Brander tries to do anything to my sister, I'm going to kill him!"

Dan! said nothing; and Roy moved abruptly past him and went below.

He was not seeking Faith; but he came upon her there, in the main cabin. She was at the table, with a book, and paper and pen. He stopped to look over her shoulder, and saw that she was making calculations—latitude and longitude.

"What are you doing?" he asked. She looked up at him.

"Studying navigation, Roy. Don't you want to?"

He stared at her.

"What are you doing it for?"

"Because I want to be a Heedless, it's a good thing to be able to find out where you are on a world as big as this."

He flung himself into a chair across from his sister.

"Look here, Faith, why do you keep looking at Brander all the time?"

Faith was startled; she was startled so much at what Roy said, as at what his words revealed to her. Nevertheless her voice was steady and quiet as she asked:

"What do you mean, Roy?"

"The way you look at Brander. He's not fit for you to talk to, to look at—anything. He's not fit to be around you."

She laughed at him.

"How do I look at Mr. Brander, Roy?" she asked.

"Why, Roy, for words. Faith was suddenly afraid of what he might say. She interrupted him.

"Don't be silly, Roy! Go away. Don't bother me. I'm busy with this, Roy."

"You—" he began.

But she bent over her book; she paid him no attention for a moment. Roy, sitting opposite, studied the top of her head, and thought there was an expression in his eyes as if he were trying to remember something familiar that evaded him. In the silence, they could hear Cap'n Wing snoring in his cabin; they could hear old Tichel snoring in his bunk; on the other side of the ship; they could hear the muffled murmur of the voices of the harpooners in the stowage, and all about them the timbers of the Sally creaked and groaned as they yielded to the tug of wind and sea. Roy still stared with a puzzled frown at the top of Faith's brown head. Faith did not look up from her book.

Suddenly Roy cried in a low voice:

"Faith, I know! You look at Brander just like you used to look at Noll Wing when we were kids!"

Faith went white. She rose to her feet so swiftly that the book was overturned on the table, the loose sheets of paper fluttered, the pen rolled across to the edge of the table and fell and struck on its point in the cabin floor.

With a motion swift as light, forgetting book and paper and pen, she slipped across into the after part of the cabin, and on the way to the door she heard her slip the catch upon it.

The Sally came abruptly into a sea that was full of whales. At nightfall they had not smelled oil for weeks; at dawn there were spouts on three-quarters of the horizon; and thereafter for more than a month there were never three successive days when they did not sight whales.

This turn of the luck brought three things to pass—Roy Kileup had his first chance in the boats during the chase; Brander killed his first whale as an officer of the Sally; and Noll Wing killed the last cachot that was ever to feel his lance.

Dan! Toney had promised Roy, at the time when Brander was promoted to be mate, that he would give the boy a chance in his boat. He put Roy on the after thwart, under his own eye, and Roy leaned to the ear and pulled with all his might, and bit his lip to hold back the sobbing of his breath; his father and his father's father had been men of the sea. He did not turn white when the boat bowled at last alongside a lumbering black mass, and the keen harpoons checked home.

The first experience of Roy's was a mild one. The whale, a fatish bull, showed no fight whatever. He took the irons as a baby takes soothing syrup; and he lay still while they pulled alongside and prodded him with a lance. At the bow, when his spout was a crimson fountain, he gave one gigantic forward leap; but he was dead ten fathoms from the spot where he lay when the first harpoon went home. Thereafter there was only the long toll of the harpoon, when his spout was a time; and his bit of luck made it possible for the fourth mate to prove his mettle. When they sighted spouts in three quarters, that morning the mate had chosen to go after a lone bull; old Tichel and Brander attacked a small pod which was straggling; and Willie Cox went north to try a fish there.

Brander gave Tichel right of way, since the old man was his superior officer; and they came upon the pod with a matter of seconds to choose between them. The whale, very small, and very small; nevertheless, Tichel tackled the largest, and Brander took the one that fell to him. His irons went home a moment after Tichel's; his whale leaped into the first blind straggle, not fleeing, but fighting to shake off the iron.

Now it is customary among whalers to wait till this first flurry has passed, to allow the whale to run out his own strength, and then pull in for the finishing stroke. But Brander was ambitious; the whale was small. He wanted to show his mettle; he shouted orders to his men, and in the loose coils of line that had been thrown over with the irons, the whale was circling, rolling, striking with its flukes; it had not seen them, gave them no heed, but his very blindness of his struggle made it a greater moment. They drew in on the whale; and Loum at the steering-ox swung Brander against the monster's flank. Brander got home his lance to three thrusts before they were moved to draw clear to avoid the whale's straggling. But those three were enough; and Brander was too good and backed away from the final flurry, and the whale was dead ten minutes from the time the first iron went home.

The whale was small enough to show Brander's ability; his lance kill marked him as a man who knew his job. He would have a forfeit to be content; but when his whale was tin out and he looked around, he was just in time to see trouble come upon James Tichel.
