GOVERNMENT HITS FURTHER BLOWS IN CONSPIRACY CASE

Transportation of Liquor by Boats With Alleged Aid of Whitney Told by Hubbard. Prosecuting Witness Also Describes Money Paid and Rides Given to W. C. T. U.

(Associated Press Special Wire) SEATTLE, Aug. 18.—Another phase of the government's case against five former prohibition officials of the Pacific northwest, charged with corruption and bribery in office, was cited in federal court here today by Alfred M. Hubbard, former run runner who became a prohibition agent and now is testifying against his former superiors. The Olmsted ring, Hubbard said, was forced to change its liquor running system after the first Olmsted indictment in May, 1926. Several speedboats were obtained in the early fall of 1926. Ten or twelve loads of liquor were brought in on the Puddle Dumper and four or five loads, consisting of from 150 to 200 cases, were brought in on the Miss Victoria. When additional boats were needed by the Olmsted gang, Hubbard said, the run king asked him to buy one for them and he talked the matter over with William M. Whitney, former assistant prohibition administrator, and Earl Corwin, former chief field agent, two of the defendants in the trial. Payments Recited. During the summer and early fall of 1926, Hubbard said, he made payments of from $1000 to $2000 a month to Whitney and from $500 to $600 a month to Corwin. The payments were made in installments several times a month, Hubbard said, and were collected by Hubbard from the Olmsted ring. Hubbard said he paid Whitney only $1000 every month, except one, and that time Whitney complained it was hardly worth while, considering all the work involved preparing reports and other matters. Hubbard said he personally kept 10 per cent of all protection money paid by the ring. When Olmsted and Christ Curtis, who was associated with the former run king, asked Hubbard for advice in regard to another boat, he suggested the 494-M, which belonged to a dope runner, Hubbard said Whitney, when told of the matter, said go ahead but not to get his name mixed up in it. The title of the 494-M was changed from Hubbard's to Whitney's name, the witness said, when Hubbard became involved in litigation. Faster Boat Operated. Only one load of liquor was hauled at that time by the Olmsted ring in the 494-M because it was too slow for their work, Hubbard said he built another hull, the 887-M, which he sold to Olmsted and equipped with the engine of the 494-M. Hubbard said he then obtained a new engine for the 494-M and used it partly for prohibition work and partly for the Olmsted ring. Olmsted then hauled three or four loads of liquor in the 494-M at intervals when it was not being used as a prohibition scout boat, Hubbard said. Assistant U. S. Attorney General Leslie E. Saller turned the questioning back to the title of the 494-M. Hubbard testified that he gave Whitney a bill of sale for the boat, although he himself was the actual owner. The 494-M was still in Whitney's name when it was sold to Olmsted in the fall of 1926, Hubbard said. Hubbard said that he supervised the work on the motor and the upkeep of the 494-M and other vessels used by Olmsted or for prohibition scout work, including the Alice.

ROCK FOR AIRPORT BEING FURNISHED

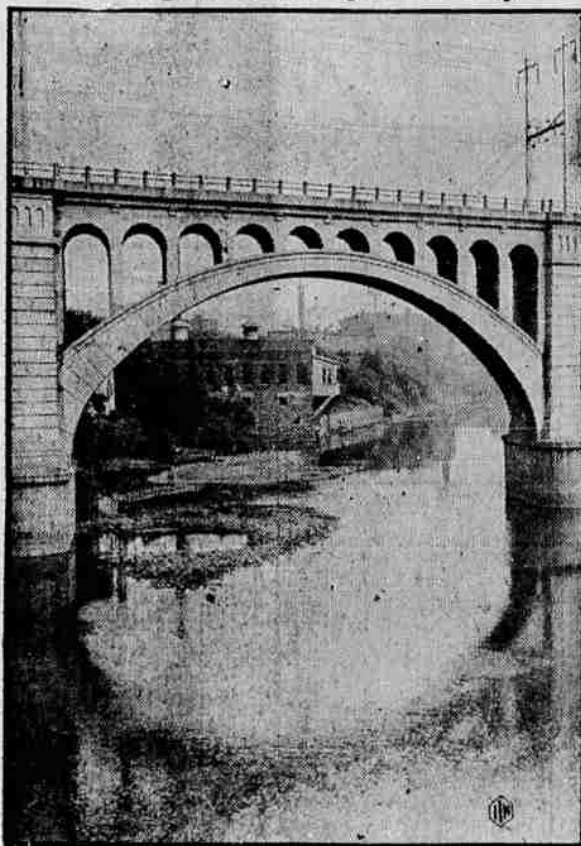

Joe Denn, chairman of the board of airport commissioners, flew down from Portland yesterday to make further arrangements for improvements at the local field. The city is entering into an agreement with the county court for crushed rock with which to surface the winter runways, the county furnishing the rock to the city at cost. The rock will be delivered from the Melrose crusher and will be hauled in county equipment, with the city paying the cost of crushing and delivery. This arrangement, which is much cheaper than a contract would be, will leave, it is believed, sufficient funds to finance the lighting of the field.

and old, Hubbard testified, for the operation of the boats. The expense was either put in as vouchers or charged to the personal account of Whitney, Hubbard or others in the department, he said.

Drought Marks Quaker City

A view of the Green Lane bridge, Philadelphia, Pa., over the Schuylkill river, showing how low the water has sunk during the present drought. The bed of the river is shown, above water, for the first time since the bridge was built in 1818. Water has ceased to pour over the Fairmount park dam, thus giving grave apprehension to residents of the city, who now fear a shortage of water.

EVANS EXPLAINS SECRECY COVERING CLIFFORD DUSTER

(Associated Press Special Wire) EUGENE, Aug. 18.—David B. Evans, Lane county member of the state game commission, said today a pledge of secrecy barred the commission from revealing evidence resulting in the removal from office of Harold Clifford, state game warden, and Ed Clark, his assistant. Evans said 60 per cent of the testimony presented at the commission's recent hearing which brought about the ouster of Clifford and Clark, was given by a dozen employees only after each commissioner gave his word absolute secrecy would protect the witnesses. "This testimony," Evans said, "was not recorded but was exceedingly damaging to Clifford and Clark. If Governor Norblad wishes to make a thorough study of the evidence before acting on the protests to the commission's action, he must either conduct his own hearing using the same witnesses under a pledge of secrecy, or pledge the commissioners to keep

MERGED RAILWAYS ANSWER PROTESTS

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18.—In behalf of the Great Northern and Northern Pacific railways, the interstate commerce commission today filed a rejoinder to protest filed by Minnesota and other northwestern states renewing opposition to the projected merger of those two railroads and the Burlington system. The railroad argument said the states' request for re-hearing "would be premature and would serve no useful purpose." It added a general denial to the various grounds of attack indicated against the merger and said all interests had been heard. "All of the representations will be considered by the commission."
