The SEA BRIDE
By BEN AMES WILLIAMS

CHAPTER XXXIV.

"What is it, Noll?" Faith asked. "Why are you—angry?"

He lifted a clenched hand over his head; it trembled there for an instant, then came slowly down. He wrenched open the door to the main cabin, and went out and left her standing there.

Faith watched him go, perplexity in her eyes. Dan'l joined him, and they went on deck together.

They came to the Solander grounds with matters still in this wise—Brander much with the crew, Noll Wing rotting in his cnair in the cabin; Faith gaining strength of soul with every day; Dan'l playing upon Noll upon Roy, upon all those about him to his own ends.

The Solander received them roughly; they passed the tall Solander Rock and cruised westward, keeping it in sight. There was another whaling ship, almost hull down north of them, and the smoke that clouded her told the Sally she had her try-pots going. Dan'l Tobey was handling the vessel, and he chose to work up that way; but before they were near the other craft, the masthead men sighted whales—spouts all about, blossoming like flowers upon the blue water.

Noll had regained a little of his strength when they came upon the grounds. He took the ship, and bade Dan'l and the other mates lower one single out a lone whale.

"They'll all be bulls, hereabouts," he said. "Big ones, too. We'll take one at a spell and be thankful for that."

The whale was, as Noll had predicted, a bull. Dan'l made the kill, a ridiculously easy one. The vast creature lifted a little in the water at the first iron; he swam slowly southward; but there was no fight in him when they pulled up and drove home the lance.

An hour after lowering the whale was alongside the Sally—a monstrous creature, not far short of the colossus Cap'n Wing had slain. He was made fast to the flukeshain bit, and the cutting in began forthwith. That, too, on Noll Wing's order.

"Fair weather never sticks, hereabouts," he said. "Work while there's working seas."

Now the first task when cutting in a whale is to work off the head; and that is no small job. For the whale has no neck at all, unless a certain crease in his thick blubber may be called a neck. The spades of the mates, keen-edged, and mounted on long poles with which they lash downward from the cutting stage chock into the blubber and draw a deep cut along the chosen line. The carcass is laboriously turned, the process is repeated. Thus on, till at last the huge thing can be torn free.

Before the work on this whale was half done it became apparent that a gale was brewing. Cross swells, tangling together at the mouth of Foveaux Strait, kicked up a drunken sea that made the Sally pitch and roll at the same time—a combination not relished by any man. Nevertheless, the head was got off and hauled alongside for cutting up.

This work had taken the better part of the night; and with the dawn there arose a whine in the wind that sang a constant high note in the taut rigging. With the Sally pitching and rolling drunkenly, the 15-ton junk was got off the head and hoisted aboard, while every strand of rigging creaked and protested at the terrible strain. The blubber was coming in; but the wind was increasing.

In the end the Sally had to let go what remained of her catch and run for it, losing thereby the huge "case" full of spermaceti, and a full half of the blubber.

They ran into Port William for shelter. Noll Wing swore at his ill luck, and when the ship was anchored, went sullenly below. Dan'l drove the men to their tasks.

The weeks that followed were repetitions of this first experience, with such capricious modifications as the gales and the sea chose to arrange. They killed many big whales; some they lost altogether, some they lost in part, and some few they harvested. They fell into the way of running for port with their kill as soon as the whale was alongside, rather than risk the storms in the open. It was hard and steady work for all hands; and as the men had grumbled at ill luck when they sighted no whales so now they grumbled because their luck was overgood.

Dan'l found them easy working, ready for his hands; and by a word dropped now and then through these busy times, he led them in the way he wished them to go. He never let them forget for one thing, the ambergris beneath the cabin. When they grumbled, he reminded them it was there as a rich reward for all their labors. He reminded them at the same time, that Brander claimed it.

Neither did he let the men forget that which he wished them to believe of Faith and Brander. By indirections, by words with Roy which he took care they should overhear, by reproofs for chance caught gossip he kept the matter alive in their minds, so that they began to look at Faith sidewise when she appeared on deck.

Brander was not blind to this, and, if he had been blind, Mauger's one eye would have seen for him. He knew the matter in the minds of the men, but he could not be sure that Dan'l was putting it there. Nevertheless, he spoke to Dan'l of it one day. It was the first time since Brander came aboard that he and Dan'l had had more than a passing word alone.

Brander made an opportunity to take the mate aside. He held Dan'l's eyes with his own and said steadily:

"Mr. Tobey, there's ugly talk among the men aboard here that should be put a stop to."

Dan'l looked surprised; he asked what Brander meant. Brander said openly:

"They're coupling my name with that of the captain's wife. You've heard them. It should be ended."

"I know," Dan'l said amiably. "It's very bad. But that is a thing you can't stop from the after deck, Mr. Brander."

"That's true. So what do you think should be done in the matter?"

The mate waved his hand.

"It's not my affair, Mr. Brander. It's not me whose name is coupled with Faith's."

Brander nodded, his face hot.

"Suppose I go forward again," he said. "I'll make some occasion to commit a fault; Cap'n Wing can send me forward and put Silva, or another, in my place.

Dan'l looked at Brander sharply, and he shook his head.

"The men would be saying then that it was because of this matter you were put out of the cabin."

"I suppose so."

"It is very sure."

"What would you suggest?" Brander asked, his eyes holding Dan'l's.

Dan'l seemed to weigh the matter.

"How if you were to leave the ship completely?" he inquired.

Brander's eyes narrowed; and Dan'l, in spite of himself, turned away his head. If Brander left the ship— There was no other man aboard whom he need fear when the time should come. If Brander but left the ship—

Brander's eyes narrowed; he studied Dan'l; and after a little he laughed harshly, and nodded his head as if assured of something which he had doubted before.

"No," he said. "No. I'll not leave the Sally." He could never do that; there might come the day when Faith would have to look to him. "No; I'll stick aboard."

Dan'l's hopes had leaped high; they fell low. But he his his chagrin.

"You are right," he said. "That is a deal to ask, just to stop the idle chatter of the men. Best stay—it will be forgotten."

Brander turned abruptly away to crush down a sudden flood of anger that had clenched his fists. He knew Dan'l now beyond doubt. He had guessed the mate's eagerness to be rid of him. Dan'l should not have his way in this so easily.

Dan'l's own eyes had been opened by this talk with Brander. The mate's heart had not yet formed his full design; he was working evil without any further plan than to bring harm and ruin. But Brander's suggestion, the possibility that Brander might leave the ship had revealed to Dan'l in a single flash how matters would lie in his two hands if Brander were gone. Noll Wing was nothing; old Tichel he could swing; Willis Cox was a boy; the crew were asleep. Only Brander stood out against him; only Brander must be beaten down to clear his path. With Brander gone—

Dan'l set himself to the task of eliminating Brander. He thought of many plans. A little mishap in the whaling, a kinked line, a flying spade, an ugly mischance—These could not be arranged; he could only hope for the luck of them; but that need not prevent him working to help the fates. Not openly; he could not do that without setting Brander on guard. And Brander on guard was doubly to be feared. Dan'l remembered an ancient phrase, the advice of a philosopher to a rebellious soul: "When you strike at a king, you must kill him!" It was so with Brander; he must be destroyed at a blow—utterly.

Noll was a tool that might serve; Noll would strike, if he could be roused to the full measure of wrath. Dan'l worked with Noll, discreetly, in hidden words, appearing always to defend. Brander and Faith meant no harm he said. They were friends, no more. Dan'l assured Noll of this, again and again; and he took care that his assurances should not convince.

"Why must you always be defending Faith?" Noll stormed at him, one night. "Why do you stand by her?"

"I've always known Faith, sir," Dan'l said humbly. "I don't want to see her do anything—that is, I don't want to see you harsh with her, sir."

And Noll fell into a brooding silence that pleased Dan'l mightily. But still the captain did not strike at Brander.

Dan'l reminded the captain that Brander still gave much time to the crew; he played on that string, still hoping that Noll might be roused to overwhelming rage. But Dan'l's poisoned soul was losing its gift of seeing into the hearts of men. The old Noll would have reacted to his words as he hoped. This new Noll was another matter; this Noll aging and rotting with drink, was led by Dan'l's talk to hate Brander—and to fear him. His fear of Brander and of the one-eyed man obsessed even his sober mind. He would never dare seek to crush Brander openly; Faith he might strike, but not the man.

In the end, even Dan'l perceived this; he cast about for a new instrument, and found it in the man Slatter.

Slatter had crossed Brander's path, to his sorrow. The loose-tongued man dropped some word of Faith which Brander heard, and Brander remembered. He made pretext of Slatter's next small failure at work to pommel the man unmercifully. No word of Faith in this; he thrashed Slatter for idling at the windlass when a blanket strip was being hoisted, and for impudence. Slatter was his enemy thereafter.

Oh Boy! What Joy
LIFT CORNS RIGHT OUT
The English Way

Right from England comes the new, better, joyful way to take out corns—roots and all.

Callouses go also and you can rub off that hard skin on heels and toes with your hand—the magic treatment.

Ask Nathan Fullerton or any leading druggist for a package of Radox—put 2 tablespoonfuls in a gallon of hot water—do this for 3 or 4 nights in succession—then lift out the corns.

This joyful exhilerating foot bath is simply great—you'll enjoy every minute of it and your burning, sore, tired, aching feet will feel better than they have for years—ask for Radox and foot comfort will be yours.—Adv.

RELIEF FROM CURSE OF CONSTIPATION

A Battle Creek physician says, 'Constipation is responsible for more misery than any other cause.'

But immediate relief has been found. A tablet called Rexall Orderlies has been discovered. This tablet attracts water from the system into the lazy, dry, evacuating bowel called the colon. The water loosens the dry food waste and causes a gentle, thorough, natural movement without forming a habit or ever increasing the dose.

Stop suffering from constipation. Chew a Rexall Orderlie at night. Next day bright. Get 24 for 25c today at the nearest Rexall Drug Store.—Adv.

Ends Piles Quick

Pile sufferers can only get quick, safe and lasting relief by removing the cause—bad circulation of the blood in the lower bowel. Cutting and external remedies can't do this—an internal medicine must be used. HEM-ROID, the prescription of Dr. J. S. Leonhardt, a specialist, succeeds, because it relieves this blood congestion and strengthens the affected parts. HEM-ROID is sold by druggists everywhere, and has such a wonderful record of success right in this city that Chapman's Drug Store says to every Pile sufferer, try HEM-ROID at my risk. It must end all Pile agony or you get your money back. —Adv.

WHY FAT MEN STAY FAT

"The trouble with me, and I guess this applies to 99% of the men who are putting on weight, I didn't have the energy or "pep" to keep it off. Lost all interest in any healthy activity and just lazed around accumulating the old pounds until I got that "Kruschen feeling."

Start taking Kruschen Salts—that's the common-sense way to reduce—but don't take them with the idea that they possess reducing qualities in themselves.

This is what they do—they clean out the impurities in your blood by keeping the bowels, kidneys and liver in splendid working shape and fill you with a vigor and tireless energy you'd most forgotten had existed.

As a result instead of planting yourself in an easy chair every free moment and letting flabby fat accumulate you feel an urge for activity that keeps you moving around doing the things you've always wanted to do and needed to do to keep you in good condition.

Then watch the pounds slide off! Kruschen Salts are the up-to-date Fountain of Youth. Take one half teaspoonful in a glass of hot or cold water tomorrow morning and every morning—and if they don't change your whole idea about reducing, go back and get the small price you paid for them. Get an $2 cent bottle of Kruschen Salts—lasts 4 weeks—at Nathan Fullerton's or any progressive druggist anywhere in the world.—Adv.
