TWO EX-CONVICTS TELL OF BRIBERY FOR OLMSTED RING

(Associated Press Leased Wire)

SEATTLE, Aug. 27.—Echoes of the plan of Roy Olmsted, former northwest rum king, to involve numerous prominent Seattle business men in a liquor conspiracy ring, were heard in federal court here today from two government witnesses in the Lyle-Whitney conspiracy and bribery trial.

Roy C. Lyle, former dry administrator; William M. Whitney, his assistant; Earl Corwin and R. L. Fryant, former agents, and Clifford T. McKinney, former assistant U. S. attorney, are charged with conspiring with rum runners and accepting protection money.

Pete Dahl and George Kearns, two of Olmsted's former employes, described a bootleggers' convention, which was held in an apartment house here in 1925, in which the former rum king made his proposal to photograph all checks received in payment for liquor from prominent Seattle men so as to "make the conspiracy so large it would be thrown out of court" if the ring was ever arrested.

Kearns, who like Dahl, spent a year and a day at McNeil island after being arrested in the Wood mont beach raid in which Olmsted was captured with a load of liquor, said he was the "bookkeeper" for the rum runners. He said other rum runner delegates to the convention refused to go throug with Olmsted's plan, believing the "presence of a federal agent in the ring" was sufficient protection. Kearns referred to Alfred M. Hubbard, who attended the meeting.

The "bookkeeper" told of moving liquor from a cache at the Union stables here to the "House of David," another cache maintained by the Olmsted group, because "we knew a raid was coming."

After testfying he had talked to Hubbard about federal protection, U. S. Attorney Anthony Savage asked Kearns:

"Did you ever deliver any money to Hubbard?"

Kearns answered in the affirmative, saying Hubbard would give him receipts for it which would be credited to the bookkeeper at the end of the month. He said he kept records of all money spent, including protection money.

"Did you ever deposit any money for Hubbard?"

"Yes, at the National Bank of Commerce."

"Did you ever give any other money to a government official?"

"Yes, Hubbard."

"What for?"

"To take care of the coast guard."

"How much?"

"Once $900 and again $500."
