MANY Roseburg folks have taken advantage of the two-day holiday which occurred this week-end, and are leaving for popular resorts for a short outing. Dances and other boches will draw crowds, and Crater and Diamond lakes will also have their enthusiasts.

With the first of September the attention of everyone is turned toward the opening of school. Those who have children of school age, are renewing their interest in the coming school work, while college girls are gladly preparing for the good times ahead.

The rooms were beautifully decorated in yellow and green, color scheme being carried out in the delicious luncheon which was served later.

Miss William Scott was completely surprised when a group of women of the Mooseheart Legion gathered at her home on Friday evening, August 22, to honor her with a farewell party prior to her departure on Thursday of this week for Alberta, Canada, for an extended visit with her parents at her former home.

The evening was enjoyably spent with music and social conversation. At a late hour dainty refreshments were served.

Flowers Predominate In Season's Fashions

The importance of flowers cannot be over-emphasized this season. The costume above is a more background to the clusters of forget-me-nots that trim the hat and frills. Of beige chiffon, the frock utilizes the popular flower ornamentation at the waistline. A wrap of chiffon is bordered with blue fox thus blending subtly with the entire costume.

Miss Gladys Strong Takes Private Lessons With Well Known Artist

Miss Gladys Strong returned early in the week from Portland where she studied with Madame Marguerite Meville Liszewska, pianist and teacher. Decoration Without Ostentation Mark Keynote of Fall Fashions Harmonious Blends Predominate and Produce Chic and Charm in Styles Designed for Fall Wear, While Fur Comes to the Fore in All Ways and Costumes.

By ALICE ALDEN
Furs, rich velvets, shimmering laces, glittering metallic cloths, these are the principal items on the sartorial menu prepared for women for the autumn and winter months. And yet, what is being decreed that simply—but an expensive simplicity—shall prevail. Which means, of course, that fabrics will be more magnificent and opulent than ever, that trimming will be richer, and clothes more costly, but that the essential keynote will be decoration without ostentation.

More Charming Than Ever
There is much of interest in the new autumn fashions. The entirely revolutionary ideas that created such a furor when they were first displayed last year, have been accepted but modified. And the result is that clothes are more charming and alluring than ever. Long dresses will remain. For evening wear, two alternative lengths are offered—either floor length, or the staple or ankle line. There is to be no definite change in the silhouette but there are some modifications that should be noted. The trimmings and skirts do not flare as they did, but rather hang in soft folds of drapery.

For Morning Wear
As to clothes for morning wear, sports clothes, as we know the term, have vanished, except of course for actual participation in athletic games. In their place, we have trig little three piece suits of soft woolsens, or of cloth beautifully fur trimmed. And for wear under coats, there are simple but perfectly tailored frocks of light-weight woolsens or silk crepes. These are practical, neat and informal, without sacrificing any of the charm to severity of cut and detail.

Distinction and Dignity
Formality is the theme of the costumes intended for afternoon wear. Rich laces, heavy crepes, lustrous but soft satins, broad cloths and velvets are used with distinction and dignity. In draped and intricate models the slightly uneven hemline will be found to prevail. As to the color card for such clothes, black, black combined with white and green, gray and beige will be much in demand.

Evening Gowns
Evening gowns will be individual, beauty and veritally being the place of one prescribed fashion. Long trailing gowns for the dignified matron; rich laces and brocades designed on medieval lines for the tall, romantic type; dresses of ruffles of tulle or lace on satin or velvet foundations; long and gracefully pleated models, created by Jean Charles Worth of Paris for the woman who likes her clothes on tailored lines, even for evening wear, and dinner pajamas, originally sponsored by the same house, for the hostess when dining at home with intimate friends. And so there is an infinite variety that should enable every woman to "find" her type and personality and express it through the medium of her clothes.

The principal materials for evening will be heavy Lyons velvet, soft velvet, much transparent velvet—a material that constantly gains in beauty and so increases in popularity, both for day and evening use—georgette, lame, tulle and lace.

Perfect Blend
Black and white will predominate for both day and evening. It is unexcelled for chic and charm. One sort of costume. For the coat, to be noted in all types of costume. Velvet belts will be found on afternoon and evening frocks of metallic cloth, often with a bow on one side. As for the neckline on the evening gown, it will be mostly a matter of low on the shoulder, high in front and pointed in back, with occasionally a one-sided effect to the back. Small white flowers will be used to outline some décolletages, and artificial flowers will enhance many a gown. Long scarfs, subtly draped, after the fashion originated by Chanel will be much used. Surray pleats will also be much in evidence, also tiered skirts.

Far is very much to the fore, used in all sorts of ways on all sorts of costumes. For the coat, the huge fur collar will prevail with elaborate cuffs. Evening wraps will add long scarfs of precious furs to their charms, and the separate fur scarf will also be a feature of many day coats. Good clothes, well chosen, should give long and valuable services this winter, which is at least something for which to be grateful.

New York Stylists Reveal Fashion Trends For Fall and Winter

NEW YORK, Aug. 30.—Evening gowns are going to display a lower décolletage than ever this winter, early fashion showings indicate. The front neckline dips lower than last year, fashion leaders say, while the backs often swoop down to the waist, and the woman with angular shoulder blades will do well to cast a thoughtful eye about her before she chooses her evening array. A figure has become a thing of importance again, for most of the evening gowns fit trimly about the waist and hips. They curve enough to reveal the figure, although the indentation at the waste is not sharp. Their hemlines generally miss the floor by two or three inches—enough to permit in lemmas to dance without tripping over her skirt as she did last winter. This summer, she who wishes to slink may have black satin, mottled to her figure. With the donning of her evening coat, which is still a coat, miffy will sound the final note of her evening elegance. "Evening coats may be quite long this year," says Mr. Carnegie. "They may reach the hem of the gown in the back and be as much as ten inches shorter in front. They will follow, of course, the fitted waist and flared skirt, all-bouffé that marks the mode this winter, and they will be very richly furled. Even the hemlines are banded in fur, generally in natural black or silver fox. They will be of velvet or metal brocade, lined with satin or velvet." Short evening wraps also seem likely to have a vogue. One designer shows a black velvet, fitted at the waist, flaring sharply, and ending just below the hips. It is collared, cuffed and banded about its rippling fall in white fox. Gowns will be long, reaching well above the elbow and will generally match the color of the gown, white slippers will be of dull satin or heavy ribbed silk in corresponding shades.

Autumnal Styles Set New Era of Perfection

Drapery, exceptionally good this autumn after several seasons of absence, is the interesting feature of the stunning formal creation pictured above. An intricately tucked girde laps in front and suddenly cascades to the floor in a graceful drape, while another falls from the right shoulder at the back.
