George W. Ballard, state organizer for the Disabled Veterans of the World War, and E. O. Kjos, state executive, arrived in Roseburg last night in the interest of the organization's forerunner, the Oregon State Soldiers' Home.

The two officers of the veterans' organization, guests of Commandant and Mrs. S. W. Starmer last night, made a thorough inspection of the state institution, which they praised very highly, declaring that the veterans residing there are being given exceptional attention.

They stated that the organization will use its influence in any possible way to assist Roseburg in securing the proposed branch of the national soldiers' home, believing that conditions here fully justify unanimous support from the state for Roseburg as a site.

Mr. Ballard issued a warning to Roseburg people to beware of persons soliciting funds in the name of the disabled veterans and their families, but instead of being put to individual use. The organization is now engaged in a state-wide drive for funds through the annual forerunner sale, this men are engaged here. They are going to Grants Pass tonight to continue the work. ALFALFA'S WORTH PROVED ON FARM
Alfalfa has proven a successful crop on the farm of Fred Harris, Gunter, who has cooperated with J. C. Leedy, county agent, in conducting a trial plot of one acre during the past season.

Inoculated seed was planted late in May on land receiving 21 tons of ground limestone per acre. Land planted at the rate of 300 pounds per acre was applied at planting time and the field was given one irrigation in mid-summer. An excellent stand was secured.

When clipped in September, a yield of one-half ton of hay was secured, and 100 head of turkeys have ranged over the field and been supplied with green feed since that time.

JAKE FLEAGLE DIES

OF BULLET WOUND

FIRED BY CAPTOR

Notorious Bank Robber and

Murderer Gives Little

Information as to

His Crimes.

SPRINGFIELD, Mo., Oct. 15.—Jake Fleagle, notorious bank robber and murderer, shot yesterday at Branson, Mo., when captured by a posse of officers, died in a hospital here today.

Fleagle, lying, pleaded for his mother, but no word from her had come this morning when he died.

The bandit last night had reporters send a wire to his mother's home at Holcomb, Kans., asking her to come to his bedside.

Officers said she could not possibly arrive until late today and they doubted one message would bring her, expressing belief she probably would fear a ruse by officers.

Fleagle, rallying briefly early today, told officers in the guard about his hospital bed that he wished they urge his mother to come to see him, saying, "I'm afraid I'm going to die."

To one officer he said, "I don't know who shot me and it don't make no difference, but I wish they had made a good job of it."

Officers sought to question him about various crimes throughout the night, but due to his condition little information was obtained.

Just before he died Fleagle admitted he had been hiding in the Ozarks for a year, living in an elaborately furnished cabin.

Seven miles south of Hollister, in the lake country near Branson where he was captured. He leased the place last October.

Officers found five guns in the cabin and a quantity of ammunition. One gun was identified as the pistol with which Fleagle shot at the postmaster at Tracy, Cal., in a holdup. He missed and officers obtained the bullet and later determined it came from the gun found today.

Various persons at Branson today identified pictures of Fleagle as the man who leased the cabin near Hollister about a year ago and said he had many visitors.

Officers said these probably were confederates and other outlaws.

Fleagle, who was conscious until about five minutes before he died, asked that all the furniture and personal effects in the cabin go to his mother. Asked if he had any money hidden, he declined to answer.

The gunman was captured on a Missouri Pacific passenger train at Branson, Mo., yesterday by a group of officers. His capture ended a nationwide manhunt begun when his band of desperadoes looted the First National bank of Lamar, Colo., May 1928, in a robbery which has led to seven deaths.

The wounded outlaw found sufficient strength to plead with H. D. Harper, chief of police of Colorado Springs, to "do something for Fred," his brother, on trial for a Larned, Kans., bank robbery. Fred, he said, was innocent.

Three physicians performing a major operation on the bandit found the bullet had struck below the ribs on the right side, rupturing a blood vessel.

Postal inspectors, searching relentlessly for the desperado in the belief he had a hand in the robbery of a Southern Pacific mail train at Pittsburg, Cal., traced him to the Ozark country through letters he had mailed on trains to that section.

Tries to Give Battle
An impressive array of officers assembled in the region and secretly combed the countryside for the outlaw. Although a trap had been set for Fleagle, the meeting yesterday was by chance.

Fleagle was confronted on the train which he boarded here to travel to Hollister, a nearby town.

Five officers, all with drawn pistols, ordered Fleagle to put up his hands. Instead, he reached for his pistol.

One shot was fired and the bandit leader fell with a bullet in his abdomen. After a brief struggle his weapon was wrested from him. None of the officers would reveal who fired the shot.

A telegram to Los Angeles detective headquarters however indicated Lieut. Harry Wilde of that department fired the shot that ended the bandit's life.

Four men were killed by the Lamar robbers and three members of the gang already have paid with their lives on the gallows at the Colorado penitentiary.
