POEM FOR THE DAY

By LOUIS ALBERT BANKS

SAFETY IN NUMBERS

"An old native of the cyclone belt one said to me: 'If a cyclone seems to be standing still it is time for you to cut and run—it means that the twister is headed straight for you.' Although my old friend didn't know it, he expressed a shrewd analogy of life in that observation of his.

"If life seems to be standing still; if you are interested in the same people and the same things that you were interested in one, two or three years ago, and if they look to you exactly as they did at that time, it means that you are standing still. You are standing in the danger zone, and standing still in the danger zone with the 'twister' of life ready to overwhelm you at any minute is just plain asking for trouble. You will not be overwhelmed by a tornado, but you will be mired in the log of Human Inertia. The only way to live life is to live on the move.

The tendency of the average run of folks is to stand still after they have reached maturity. Marriage and the birth of their first-born are to them life's last great adventures. After that, in the treadmill of living, the mind gets set in a narrow rut."—Robert Quillen.

Beware that awful danger zone Where no advancement you have shown. For man was made for constant growth—Was never meant to be a sloth. We grow while climbing up life's hill, But always stagnate standing still. Man thrives while on the way to top—An idle mind's the devil's shop.

The man who's always on the move Escapes the lazy fatal groove Which is the curse of many men. Whose lives are but a branding pen; He roams the verdant open range With all its novelty and change; He scents adventure in the air And beards his foes right in their lair.

We are not meant to walk the rut. Hold on and on where we are put. There's something that belongs to you If you will follow close your clue: You need not copy all the rest—Be brave enough to push your quest; It may be you'll escape the gale That follows on the beaten trail.

At any rate, keep moving on. For life is short—will soon be gone. But if we'd make it count the most, We'll not remain at hitching post; We'll freely take the open way And keep the road while still its day. "At eventide it shall be light" If we our laziness will fight.
