IDEAL CHRISTIANITY
(Eugene Guard)

IN the state of Ohio there is a religious sect whose members call themselves Amish. They live on farms and shun the cities. They wear queer, old-fashioned clothing; the women don't drive cars, the men, long coats and square hats. They will not use buttons on their garments. They have no use for such things as radios, autos, movies, phonographs.

Queen? Yes, indeed. But the other day an Amish community heard there were thousands of men in Cleveland who could not get work and who, in consequence, could not eat. And at once the Amish loaded their wagons with farm produce and trekked all the way to the city, to serve free meals to the jobless.

In the back of the Amish, along with many other sects, there is a holy, there is the observation: "By their fruits ye shall know them."

(Corvallis Gazette Times)

On the front page of one small town daily Wednesday, appeared in the headlines: "Sheriff Killed and Banker Wounded by Bandits"; "1000 Paid Assassins"; "500,000 Ransom to Free Banker"; "Opera Goes Afraid to Wear Their Jewels"; "Prepares for Real Uprising"; "Woman Held for Pleading $75,000"; "Youthful Robbers Nabbed at Eugene."

We think it quite awful if the Chinese bandits hold an American missionary for ransom, but we would better clean up our own back yard before we do too much criticizing. For we are "civilized."

WILLIAM E. COLEMAN
(Coos Bay Times)

Just two years ago a young man and his friends closed a political campaign, one full of flat and yet square from every angle. When the votes were counted the young man had been elected prosecuting attorney of Coos County.

As week succeeded week, and court session court session, the people of Coos County came to love this hard working, square dealing young attorney. His popularity grew with each day; new friends were added to his already large following. Newcomers in the county found it a real pleasure to carry on their dealings with this especially high type young district attorney.

Always a good sport and a close follower of sporting events, this young attorney went to Portland to attend the football game played between Washington State College and Oregon State last Saturday. The weekend was spent visiting his parents, residents of Portland.

Hurrying back to Coos County again to resume his heavy duties, the unseen hand reached out to check the rapid progress of this most worthy of young men. William (Bill) as he was affectionately known, Coleman is gone. His death will be mourned, his memory held sacred. We'll miss you "Bill."

PATERNALISM FAILS
(Salem Capital Journal)

The strike of some 4000 textile workers in the cotton mills at Danville, Va., now in its seventh week is unusual in that these mills have hitherto enjoyed a complete freedom from labor troubles. Conditions were supposed to be ideal and the mill settlement a model of community pride, and a source of what enlightened and far-seeing management can do in solving the labor troubles of the textile industry.

The Danville concern has been a leader in many ways. Unlike most mills, it does its own bleaching, dyeing, finishing and millinery, and is unusually well managed, utilizing every new invention. Wages, while not high compared to other industries, were high for the textile standard. Employees live in comfortable company cottages rented at $2 a week. Free electricity and water are provided. A large company built Y. M. C. A. building is headquarters for company activities, sports and entertainments.

Girls are housed in a model dormitory and chapters of perhaps too strictly for factory girl standards. A model kindergarten is maintained and two modern public schools, largely supported by the company. A medical center provides free service to employees. Employee representation is provided, really a company union, which gives employees a voice in control, and the mill management is popular with employees.

The present trouble started when a ten percent cut in wages was proposed last January from officials down. The employees requested that the workers be cut out. This was refused. Then the American Federation of Labor invaded the field and began organization work and the strike was called in September.

Thus benevolent paternalism in the handling of labor has scored another failure, and company unionism in the face of a wage cut back to complete flop. Whether or not the California trade union will prove a solution remains to be seen. At any rate the unions have chosen the best conducted mill in the south as a starting point in their campaign to unionize the south and passed up the mills where wages are far lower and conditions deplorable.

HEALTH BULLETIN

INFANTILE PARALYSIS IN CALIFORNIA

During the present year, California has suffered an epidemic of acute anterior poliomyelitis, the first outbreak of importance to occur since 1927, during which year 1208 cases were reported within the state. Since the first of January, 1930, to the middle of September, a total of 1110 cases of this disease have been reported in California. The geographical distribution of cases in 1930 shows a wide variation from the distribution of cases in the 1927 epidemic. In that year, the outbreak affected the northern end of the state much more than it did the southern end of the state, while in 1930 the distribution is exactly reversed, most of the cases this year having occurred in the eight counties of southern California. In 1927, out of a total 1208 cases reported, 353 were in the southern counties referred to and 945 were in the remaining fifty counties of the state. In 1930, from January 1st to the middle of September, out of a total of 1110 cases reported, 93 were in the eight counties of southern California and 175 were in the remaining fifty counties of the state. In 1925, however, when 321 cases were reported in California, the distribution was even, half of the reported cases occurring in southern California and half in northern California.

The 1930 outbreak made its beginning about one month earlier than the 1927 outbreak. In both 1927 and 1930 the disease became epidemic in California before it even made its appearance in epidemic form in other places. In 1927 the disease appeared in Arizona, shortly after its rise in California, swept through the southern middlewestern states to the Atlantic, back through the north-central states to the northwestern group, Oregon being the last state to suffer an epidemic of this disease that year. The same course, in part, has been followed by epidemic poliomyelitis during 1930. Of 220 cases, 109 were treated with serum and 111 received no serum. Complete recovery occurred in 61 of the 109 individuals in whom serum was administered; that is, fifty-six per cent of the individuals who were not treated recovered. Complete recovery occurred in only 25 of the 111 individuals who were not given serum treatment; that is, twenty-three per cent recovered.

From the standpoint of laboratory demonstration and growing clinical experience it would seem that so far the only logical method of specific treatment of this disease is with the serum of convalescents. The success of the method, however, rests primarily upon the early recognition of the disease. The administration of convalescent blood serum and prompt hospitalization constitute the two measures which were productive of the best results in bringing about recovery.

was far too radical an experiment to be undertaken with existing prospects of leadership in this state. If, in the future, prospects of leadership of the necessarily high and unselfish quality are better, we can vote on cabinet form of government again.

HIGHER pay for legislators lost again, as it has always lost in the past. This writer thinks that was a mistake.

But people evidently reasoned that the existing scale of pay, coupled with the honors attached to legislative service, attracts sufficiently good men. "So," they said to themselves, "why pay more?"

That sounds like a hard-headed logic. It has holes in it, of course. But the fact remains that we CAN get good legislators under the existing system.

So let's go on getting them, and devote to betterment of material conditions here in Oregon the energy that would otherwise be devoted to campaigning for higher pay for legislators.

THIS year's annual tendency to vote on measures when in doubt was strong. It may be said without much fear of contradiction that in the election of Tuesday this tendency to vote in when in doubt resulted in the defeat of NO MEASURE of fundamental importance to Oregon.

Again, as so often in the past, the people of Oregon have demonstrated their inherent common sense in the way they voted on the measures on the ballot.

Talks on Health

By DR. R. S. COPELAND

With the coming of the first cool fall days and the opening of school, children are exposed to the infectious colds. The close contact of crowded rooms makes it almost impossible to escape.

What is to be done about it? Nearly all the diseases of the nose, throat and lungs are infectious and communicable. They are most troublesome during the first chilly days when proper ventilation is difficult. The rooms are not likely to be heated and the frequent changes in temperature makes it hard to adjust the clothing properly.

Your efforts to counteract a cold cannot be used too early. Just as soon as your baby or older child begins to sniffle and sneeze and cough then quick measures should be taken for relief.

Because of the fact that colds are "catching" the patient should be separated from others of the family. It is well to keep the child in bed at least a day or two. It is only in this way that the body temperature can be kept stable and proper rest maintained.

If a child has no fever he may be placed on a cot out of doors in the sunshine if the weather is good. Otherwise he should be in bed, with the windows open to let in plenty of fresh air. Of course, the child should not be allowed to get chilled. It is best to be warmly enough covered, but not too warmly wrapped up. You must guard against conditions which produce fever prostration and further chilling. Keep the patient just comfortably warm.

A Game in Reserve
I feel sorry for the poor mother who must keep an active child in bed. A child is easily bored and restless of restraint. It is a wise mother who keeps in reserve some especially attractive and well-tooled toy or game for the sickened day.

Not only is the little patient isolated from others with fresh, quiet and warmth, but he is given some milk alkaline water or bicarbonate of soda in water. This may be administered in combination with juices of the citrus fruits. The juices of oranges, lemons or grapefruit are taken with the alkaline water, or separately, at intervals of two or three hours.

One of the uncomfortable things about a cold is the inability to breathe freely through the nose. Secretions in the nose lead to mouth breathing and sleepless night. Propping up the head with DAIRYMEN and hog raisers, who are on the lookout for a feed that may be grown profitably on their own farms, are advised by William Harrison of Garden Valley to try Jerusalem artichokes.

Mr. Harrison has been giving much attention to hog raising these past few years, and he is not complaining particularly about lack of ready cash. This farmer alleges that hogs beat fruit four ways for profit.

The hog man does not have to wait a whole year before returns begin to come in. He is enthusiastic over the matter, and will tell anyone who enquires what possibilities lie in the industry. A Kentuckian by birth, an engineer on the Louisville & Nashville road for many years, and then quitting that job and taking up his abode in the Umpqua country, where he bought a fruit tract in Garden Valley and set into the game, is the story he tells.

However, it was a long jump from the railway service to an apple orchard, and an Mr. Harrison began looking about for means of increasing his revenue from that fruit orchard. He decided to try hogs. He picked on a good breed, bought a few sows and a boar to head the flock. The next thing was to provide feed for the stock. Those sows farrowed a couple of times a year, and the first thing Harrison knew he had a lot of young pigs on hand. He sowed alfalfa, planted corn and hustled around to meet the demands. They did fine, and the Jerusalem artichokes were suggested to him as a good crop. He planted liberally, and this year has two small fields of this crop that have just come to maturity.

Those artichokes have proven the most prolific crop he has grown. An inspection of the fields showed that at least 40 tons of artichokes to the acre have been grown on that Garden Valley river bottom land. The hills are not more than 18 inches apart in the rows, while the rows are about three and a half feet apart. The ground is fairly bulging up with the immense crop. This is not a mere statement, but is actually a fact. Three or four hills of the artichokes were dug, and these were brought to town by the News-Review representative and placed in as many display windows, one of them being the chamber of commerce. Hogs fatten on those artichokes, dairy cattle like the feed, and it is conducive to a greater flow of milk. Not only are artichokes suitable feed for stock but are palatable and valuable as a food for family use. They are recommended by the department of agriculture chemists as a valuable food product, and spoken of in government reports as beneficial to persons suffering with diabetes.

Mr. Harrison has had the very best results in feeding Jerusalem artichokes to hogs and milch cows, and says that if farmers will try this product they will cut down cost of feed bills materially and get better hogs and more milk from dairy herds. Not only does this farmer, who surrendered the throttle of his engine on a regular run between Garden Valley and Louisville to another, in order to come west and grow up with the country, grow artichokes and hogs, but he knows how to raise a lot of corn to the acre. His corn crops prove this statement, and this prosperous rancher, who says he was about "broke" when he took up the new industry, has nearly a thousand bushels of as fine yellow field corn as will be found in any of the so-called "corn belt" states. This writer has been familiar with the agricultural interests of the north-

Answers to Health Queries
R. L. Q.—Are salts harmful to the body?
1.—Do you advise treatment for swollen and inflamed eyes?
2.—What kind of exercise is good for reducing a large abdomen?

A.—Salts should only be taken occasionally. If they are taken for constipation, this trouble should be corrected by proper diet.
2.—Yes. Send a self-addressed stamped envelope and repeat your question.
3.—The old-fashioned and often talked-about exercises—namely, knee bending and bending over and touching the floor without bending the knees—are well recommended. However, do not forget that consistent daily practice is essential. You should watch your diet, too.

Advice to Girls
By NANCY LEE

DEAR NANCY LEE:
I'm in love with a boy one year my senior. And I am sure he loves me too. One night I went out with him and he asked me if I loved him. I love him but I was too bashful to say yes. So he just laughed and took it just for a joke. Now when he sees me he will not speak to me. Please tell me how could I win his love back. I love him.

HEARTBROKEN: The only thing that I can suggest is for you to sit down and write a little note telling him how much his friendship has meant to you, and asking if it is not possible for you both to enjoy the nice times that you once both knew. Tell him that you did not mean to hurt his feelings, that it was merely shyness that prompted you to act as you did.

DEAR NANCY LEE:
My girl friend and I were out of town and we met two fellows and they took us home. One fellow seemed to pay attention to me. A few days later he came to see me and he made another date with me for a certain evening. But instead of me he called up my girl friend and took her out. She knew about the date I had with this fellow. Please advise me what to do if he calls me up again, as I would like to have his friendship again. Thank you. P. H.

F. H.: I would advise you to let your friendship with the girl and forget all about a man who could be cruelly of such conduct. If he calls you up again I hope that your conversation will be short and not sweet. Don't accept for that is not ladylike, but just tell him that you do not wish him to call.

DEAR NANCY LEE:
I have been keeping quite steady company with a boy several years my senior. Although my parents do not disapprove there has been talk going around about my relationship with him. Should I discontinue going with him?

TINY: The main thing is that your parents approve of your friendship with the young man. In that case you can afford to be more the gossip of your friends, unless, of course, they are aware of something unknown to your parents.

Something new in foods—Jerusalem artichokes. Spicy, healthful, nutritious. Cook them up with potatoes and serve in many ways. Try 'em once and the family will want more. At your grocer's.—Adv.

GEORGIA'S "BABY" LEGISLATOR FOUND GUILTY OF HOLDUP

(Associated Press Special Wire)
ATLANTA, Ga., Nov. 5.—H. Kirby, youngest Georgia state legislator, Wednesday was found guilty of the hold daylight holdup and robbery of a downtown finance company here and sentenced to serve two years in the state prison.

Kirby was convicted after witnesses testified that clothes found in his hotel room were those worn by the bandit. Kirby based his defense on his sworn statement and said that "a woman's honor" was involved.

A new trial will be asked, attorneys for the "baby legislator" announced.
