Poets' Corner

HALLOWE'EN

By MISS HELEN MAGERS

I've heard folks say there are no ghosts
Or goblins, but there are:
Just look in treetops some dark night—
They're hovering near and far.
For when the wind goes whooo,
And makes a dismal groan or two—
You'd better listen carefully,
For ghosts are out for game;
No matter if you plead with them,
They'll snatch you just the same!
They hover in the cornstalks tall;
They hide in corners dark;
If they can jump and scare you,
Why
They think it quite a lark.
And Jack-o-lanterns, grim and fierce,
Make faces, too, I know—
For one jumped out at me one night.

A long, long time ago,
Oh, yes, the witches still fly by
On broomsticks, as of yore;
But they are seen on Hallowe'en,
Not after nor before.
So take a warning, pray, for me,
I know what might be seen;
Keep eyes and ears, both, open wide.
On eve of Hallowe'en.

TO G. W. KIMBALL

Our thanks, Mr. Kimball, for your advice.
The suggestions you make, sound very nice.
We're inclined to think that it might be true,
To heed your advice is what we should do.

A charming place, truly, to settle down
In this quiet vale of world wide renown.
There to abide, until low in the west,
O'er Hills Eternal, Life's sun sinks to rest.

But, talking into consideration
The queer streaks found in our own formation,
The moods and fancies that oft beset us,
When we would settle down, they won't let us.

For, when Death severed the ties of our home,
He set us adrift; consigned us to roam.
Destined, it seems, through the days yet to be,
A wandering bark on a restless sea.

"A Favorite Son."

MY HOME TOWN

The following poem about Roseburg by Alden Harness, appeared in the Realty magazine, which has an international circulation.

In beauty, like some gorgeous city
Beside the legend-hallowed Nile,
Sits Roseburg, sheltered by her mountains,
Beneath the sun's effulgent smile.

The glory of her faith illumines
Her ceaseless work in many spheres.
Her fine achievements and expansion
Forever widen through the years.

To me in Roseburg nature's music
Far sweeter sounds, when swells the breeze,
Than songs of palms on tropic islands
That gem remotest Southern seas.

I heard the call of fertile valleys,
Where Umpqua's sky-blue waters flow,
And in my life's resplendent morning,
Came to this town long years ago.

I built a business that has prospered;
I never felt the urge to roam.
Forever shall this splendid city,
This peaceful haven, be my home.

LADEN BOUGHS

W. TAYLOR COOPER

I passed a tree, whose ripening fruit
Proclaimed the harvest time was near.
Upon the weighted boughs there hung
The full, rich fruitage of the year.

Each passing summer day had brought
An added burden to the tree,
Yet ever it strove, its gift of food
To bring to full maturity.

I passed again, and from the boughs
The ripened fruit had all been shorn.
Yet still drooped low their heads,
As though
They wearied from the load they'd borne.

A mother mingled with the throng;
Her hair was gray, her form was bent
With toil of years, but on her face
A look of calmness and content.

The children she had borne and led
The upward way, 'twas fraught
With cares,
Are honored men and women now.
The fruitage of her toil and prayers.

The boughs will bloom and fruit
Again,
Beyond the winter's ice and snow,
The mother's soul, beyond the grave,
Into the perfect life will grow.

IN MEMORY OF MY MOTHER, MRS. G. W. PETITT

By JEANNIE ARTHUR
A few short years ago dear Mother,
You laid my Dad away.
And now you too have left me love
Joined him up there to stay.

Sweet memories oft recall to mind,
How when I'd leave for work,
Two loving hearts waved me goodbye
And told me ne'er to shrink.

And then God took my Dad away
To dwell with Him on high.
And there was left me only one
To wave a fond goodbye.

And now when I go home to rest,
Your form I do not see.
Standing on the porch and waiting
There to welcome me.

Your life was one of sacrifice
That I might reap the gain.
You shielded me in every way
To save me from all pain.

You were a wonderful mother to me,
And as God has claimed his own
I hope your crown will be filled
With stars.

As you sit beside the great white throne,
And when this life for me is o'er,
And I am called above,
I hope to meet you and Dad once more.

In that realm of peace and love.

IN MEMORY OF GRANDDAD BETTS

By F. B.

I always shall remember you
Doing things you used to do.
A world of knowledge to you—
Of this I was very proud.
For together we'd sit for hours and speak
Of the Romans, Egyptians, Aztecs,
No matter what life we took
You knew enough about him to make a book.
