Poets' Corner

THE MOUNTAIN STREAM
I love to rest beside the rippling stream,
And listen to the weird music all its own;
'Neath the green shady trees I want to dream,
As it rushes madly on, all flecked with foam.

It comes from snowy heights, down mountain-side,
And flows thru deep ravine, and forest glade,
O'er mossy boulders plunging on to meet the tide;
I fain would gaze upon it until the day doth fade.

How sweet and balmy air, and fragrant the pine,
The birds around me twitter their melodious song;
Afair in the field I can hear the tinkling kine,
As the wild rushing torrent flows tirelessly along.

The sun gone down, the silvery moonlight beams
Sparkles like gems upon its shimmering crest;
Still it surges on, though all nature seems
Weary of the day's labor, and retired to rest.

From mountain nook it dashes down upon ocean's strand,
Upon whose heaving majestic ships do glide,
O'er rugged reefs, and seashore's glittering sand;
It's lost forever in the ocean deep and wide.
