Poets' Corner

MOUNTAINS OF OREGON
By ALDEN HARNESSE
Far away where sunlit billows toss
In tropic seas beneath the Southern Cross
Where richly fruited palm trees
Their lullabies to each lagoon;
To the remote and tranquil isles
Where fairest summer ever smiles
And life is sweet as dawn of day;
My thoughts and fancies often stray.
But these realms are not so fair to me
As the mountains that mine eyes
Now see.
The mighty mountains of sweet Oregon
With timbered summits reaching
To the sun.
Alone with nature that is calling
Me.
Among these mountains I would ever be.
Back, far back, in lonely solitudes,
Where deep and solemn silence
ever broods,
In gorgeous forests, where the wild deer roam,
With wildest grandeur I would be at home.
Some fair and favored region I would seek
And build my cabin by some mountain creek.
I would understand from songs
the trees
Are waiting on the mountain breeze
Nature's unknown laws and mysteries.
And would among the lofty peaks
Learn the language God forever speaks.
Until my heart would never, never cease
To know unbroken and eternal peace.
