Memory of Indian Attack Still Vivid to Pioneer Resident of This County

Mrs. W. C. Winston Recalls Many Experiences of Early Day Life in Umpqua Valley.

By GLENN RADABAUGH

Mostly, Aunt Aggie, Mrs. Winston and姑妈 at the table, four ladies who watch the many friends and relatives call Mrs. W. C. Winston. She is one of the best lived and most interesting characters in this county.

Her parents brought her to the Oregon territory in 1853. She was then but a year old, having been born in Hennigan, Putnam county, Illinois, May 29, 1852. Her parents, Harrison and Martha Ann Willis Rice, started on St. Patrick's day, March 17, 1853, behind ox teams and arrived at the old home place on Rice creek the following November 14. They experienced no real attacks enroute but did have many Indian scares.

On February 25, 1869, W. C. Winston took unto himself a bride and in 1871 bought the place on which Mrs. Winston now lives. Mr. Winston died April 1, 1926, after the couple had reared six daughters and two sons. Some of these children attended school under the instruction of the noted Dr. John H. Horner, now professor of history at Oregon State college.

Mr. Winston, who came to California on the train in 1861, continued on to Oregon by stage. He taught school for many years in Coles Valley, Green and Rice Creek. Among his pupils were D. R. Shambrook, S. W. Woodruff and Steve Evans, all of Roseburg.

Mrs. Winston is still active and delights in relating her experiences. She belongs to the Roseburg Woman's club, Roseburg Garden club and the W. C. T. U. Not long ago she told a gripping Indian story before one of these organizations. Here is that story, told in her own words.

"I have been asked to tell the story of the Indian attack on my father's home at Rice Creek. We had lived on this place in comparative safety for two years previous to this attack, although there were a great many Indians here at that time. In the late summer or fall of 1876 there was great disturbance among the Indians. There was quarreling and bickering among the tribes as well as enmity against the white settlers. Most all the young men and some of the older ones who could leave their homes formed themselves into a volunteer company and built a stockade on the South Umpqua river about two miles from Dillard.

"The Indians were on the war-path and as there was so much danger father moved us and grandmother Rice over to the stockade. It was not very pleasant for my mother to camp with her six children in such a place, but my father insisted on it. We were near Roseburg where we lived in camp until the weather got so cold he moved us back to the home place which had been fortified by a stockade.

"On the morning of December 1 there was a disturbance and father and an Indian man who was staying at our home went out to the shed to find out what the trouble was. The Indian went up on the hill a little way from the house and soon came running back and told father that they must get in and close to the forts for he could see the neighbor's house burning and told father the Indians would attack them at once.

"All was excitement! Mother and the older children carried in wood and water and closed up the fort while father, Uncle Austin and the Indian man were getting ammunition and guns together. The Indian told father if there was an attack they must shoot as fast as they could to make the Indians think there were more men in the house. They took some feather beds and put them in one corner of the room and grandmother, mother and her children were to stay in that corner when the attack began.

"At this time my brother, 25-year-old (he was 13 years old) died Main street. Pink carnations graced the center of the table and favors and tapers were attractively arranged. A handkerchief and card shaker was given Mrs. Tracy at the table.

Covers were placed for Mrs. Tracy, honor guest, Miss Edna Paulsen, Miss Eleanor Sherk, Miss Catherine Olson, Mrs. Ahik Wetherell, Miss Thelma Heathington, Miss Beatrice Watkins, Mrs. Mary Fuller, Mrs. Tillie Johnson and the hostess, Miss Florence Fuller.

ed that he might run to the fort on the river and tell the soldiers of the impending attack. Father and mother agreed to this and opened the stockade to let him out. Father and Uncle Austin stepped out to see if they could see the burning building of the neighbor and just then the Indians began firing. Almost the first shot hit my uncle and broke his right arm. They brought him in and closed the fort and my grandmother gave first aid.

"The Indians would shoot very fast for a while. Then there would be a pause while they were loading their guns. During these times the Indians shouted to my mother, who understood their jargon, that if we could give them our food blankets they would go away and not kill us. They said they were cold and hungry. The Indian who was with us said this was only a trick to get into the fort.

"Round about noon of shooting followed. The Indians set fire to all the outbuildings—the stock shed, the granary, the chicken house and the shop. Father was a carpenter and wagon maker and had brought some valuable tools with him. These were all destroyed.

"After a while the ammunition began to run low and my mother went over to the fire and mounded bullets. Along about noon they thought (we had no clock then) my father sprang on the Indians coming toward the house with a burning torch. Father shot at him and he threw up his hands and fell over. Three other Indians ran to him and carried him down the bank to the creek. There was no more shooting at the house. Later in the day father saw Uncle Albert (his mother's brother) coming over the hill on a horse. When he got within calling distance father told him not to come on as the Indians might be lurking around. Uncle Albert shouted that my brother, Sylvester, had escaped the Indians and had got to his house unharmed. That was the first and only time father and mother showed any emotion during the attack. They shed tears of joy to learn that my brother was safe.

"Just as he left the house the Indians began shooting at Sylvester and he said the bullets were whizzing so close to him that it puffed his shoes were blowing him back into a gully and he could run faster. When he got to the fort he found the soldiers had gone to Camas Valley to quell an outbreak, so he went to my Uncle Albert's house to warn them. Uncle Albert put all his family indoors and rode over to help us.

"Later in the afternoon four men who had come from Cow Creek looking for horses that the Indians had stolen saw the smoke from the burning buildings and came to find out what had happened. They stayed all night with us and the next day the soldiers came and moved us over to Grandfather Willis's home where we stayed the remainder of the winter."
